Sally Maddock, senator for the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, offered negative debate on the challenge course proposal at Thursday's meeting.

"I just think that $200,000 for the construction of a K-State Challenge Course ... is not a very good use of student funds, in my mind," Maddock said. "I would just really question why this was decided."

During positive debate, College of Education Senator Alex Sune said the challenge course will provide students with opportunities to improve the university through leadership.

"The advantage of having a ropes course here at K-State would be the reduced cost of actually (going to other similar courses)," Sune said.

In other final action business, Senate passed a bill with a 41-0-0 vote to review the process of the University Relations Standing Committee in September 2007 and make a recommendation in October 2007.

Senate voted 52-0-0 at its March 9 meeting to combine two of its standing committees into a new University Relations Standing Committee.

Faculty Senate Representative Alex Lovely said though he has given both negative and positive debate on the combination of the Student Affairs and Social Services and the Academic Affairs and University Relations standing committees, he also supports review of the new committee.

"The review of the committee will be very good and very healthy," Lovely said.

GARAGE | Shuttle service expected during construction

Union, might begin as soon as May 2007, and it will take 15 to 18 months of construction, Leitnaker said.

Leitnaker said the council anticipates running a shuttle for the first two years of construction, and the fee increase will help finance the parking garage.

"If we're in need of a shuttle system (during construction), we'll be prepared," he said.

Student Senate passed a resolution supporting a parking garage with a vote of 49-8-0 on Sept. 8, 2005.

While Faculty Senate members did not vote in favor of or against a parking garage, its feedback provided input for the proposed increases of rates, Leitnaker said.

Other proposed changes approved by the council at its meeting included increases in one-year student parking permits, violations for no valid parking permits, blocking drive and traffic flow.

Muir said there have been parking challenges in the past on the south side of campus, and the proposed increase of fees to help fund the parking garage will alleviate the problem.

"That's been a huge concern for numerous years, and that problem is being fixed," he said.

eliminate them from consideration," Weiser said.

Weiser also said he would prefer someone with Division I head-coaching experience. Breaking news: Davis, Huggins and Majerus have a combined 50 years of experience under their belts.

What about wins and postseason play – crucial elements of a program's success?

Davis, Huggins and Majerus have a combined record of 1,103-424 (.722 winning percentage). The trio has amassed 39 postseason appearances, three Final Fours and eight National Coach of the Year awards.

Those are impressive numbers.

But here is the million-dollar question – exactly how important is the postseason to Weiser and President Jon Wefald?

In other words, are they willing to pay top dollar for a coach who will take K-State to the NCAA Tournament?

Weiser's response might surprise you.

"I am familiar with what the going rate in the conference is," he said. "I think I understand what kind of investment is needed.

"I am not going to step back from somebody just because they may be more expensive than somebody we have had in the past."

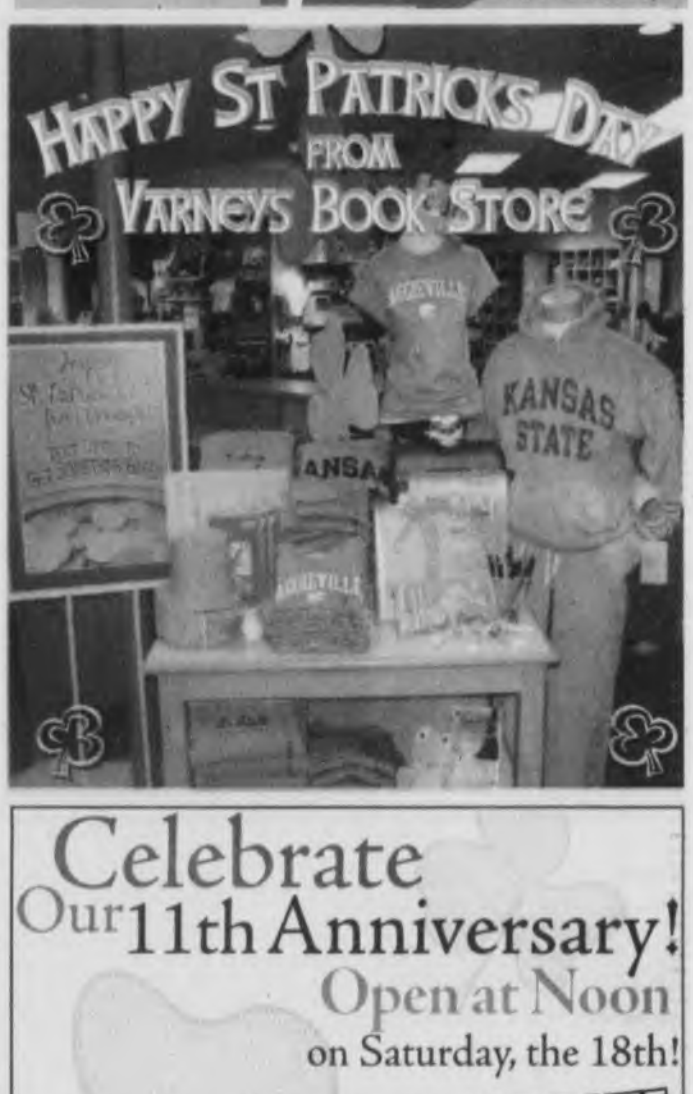
The conference was sponsored by several businesses, many of which were represented at the event, alongside many student and Greek organizations.

Several of these representatives set up display tables, and awards were distributed to one organization in all three categories for the best display.



Minorities in Agriculture, Natural Resources and Related Sciences received the award in the student organizations division, and the greek organization award went to Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity Inc. Both groups received cash prizes of $100.

State Farm Insurance won the award for best display in the business category and received a prize.

"When corporate America comes in, they put their money where their mouth is," Prince said. "When they are here, that's a powerful message. It's not a charitable thing that they're doing, it's in their best interest. And it's in all of our best interests to recognize exactly what diversity is and what it means."

Dean leaves for Ball State position

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Terry King, College of Engineering dean, announced he will take the position of provost at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind.

"He had been interested in being a provost or vice president for awhile," President Jon Wefald said. "I think he will do an outstanding job."

King
COLLEGE OF ENGINEERING DEAN

King was recruited to K-State as a dean in 1997 through a national search, Provost M. Duane Nellis said.

"Terry has done an outstanding job as dean, and this is another opportunity for him to do an outstanding job," Nellis said.

Nellis said a committee will be formed to select an interim dean from the College of Engineering to serve until another dean is hired. King will continue to serve K-State through June, Nellis said.

Nellis said he predicts the interim dean will be announced in one month to six weeks.

"Since it's kind of late to be looking for a dean, we're likely to have the interim dean for six to 12 months," he said.

Eric Reichenberger, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said he thinks King has done a good job in keeping the engineering program as one of the top in the nation.

"I just hope it's someone who can keep everything up," Reichenberger said about the next dean.

Wefald said that although he is sad to see King leave, he is excited for King.

"It's always exciting to see faculty go on to positions like this," he said.

House bill could repeal tuition law

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

House Bill 2615, which was passed into the Kansas House Judiciary Committee earlier this month, would repeal the law that allows certain immigrants to receive in-state rather than out-of-state tuition.

Melinda Lewis, director of Policy, Advocacy and Research for El Centro, said she is a supporter of the law this bill would repeal.

The law, which passed in 2004, allows immigrants without lawful immigration status who have attended a Kansas high school for three years and have graduated from a Kansas high school to receive the tuition break, Lewis said.

"We have these bright, exceptional students who are very successful in their colleges," Lewis said. "And if this law is repealed, these students will not be able to continue to go to school."

K-State men's basketball coach Bob Huggins speaks during a press conference where he was announced as the new K-State coach. Huggins last coached at the University of Cincinnati, where his contract wasn't renewed. After a year off, he accepted the offer to coach at K-State.

Wildcat fans show support for Huggins

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When K-State announced the hiring of men's basketball coach Bob Huggins Thursday, everyone seemed to have an opinion.

Talk-show hosts, sports analysts, co-workers and friends debated whether the high-profile, 52-year-old Huggins would be a good fit for the men's basketball program and the Manhattan community.

While there is no debating Huggins' previous accomplishments on the court – a 567-199 (0.740) record and 15 NCAA Tournament appearances in 24 seasons as head coach – a number of off-the-court problems have caused some to remain cautious.

"From a headline standpoint, I am extremely excited," said Matt Birzer, lifelong Wildcat fan and K.C. Catbacker president-elect. "But from an image standpoint, I am a little bit cautious."

During Huggins' 16-year tenure at Cincinnati, critics pointed to numerous player arrests, poor graduation rates and NCAA probation, along with Huggins' DUI in 2004.

When Huggins was asked Thursday if he has changed, he responded, "I don't think I'm a bad guy."

Character That Counts defines character as "doing right no matter what the cost or consequences."

Though Handley does not know Huggins personally, Handley said he believes in second chances.

"I'm always up for giving guys a fresh start and a new beginning," Handley said. "I don't know the situation, but I'm sure K-State wouldn't want to hire a guy who would make the university look

Coach plans for prominent program

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The void left by former K-State men's basketball coach Jim Wooldridge was officially filled Thursday afternoon in Bramlage Coliseum when Athletics Director Tim Weiser announced the hiring of former University of Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins to the Wildcat program.

"It's a very special day for Kansas State basketball," Weiser said. "We set out to find somebody that we know was capable of taking our situation and building it into something that, years ago, we once had.

"When I met with our team 10 days ago (after losing to Texas Tech in the first round of the Big 12 Tournament) I told them I was going to do everything I could to put them in a position, where, instead of watching and looking at other teams be selected to the NCAA Tournament, we would be that team selected to participate in the NCAAs."

Huggins, the 21st head men's basketball coach at K-State, has held three head coaching positions. His first two were at Walsh College (1980-83) and Akron University (1984-89).

His most recent stop came at Cincinnati, where he compiled a 399-127 record in 16 seasons, which is the most career wins by any Bearcat coach. He ranks third among active Division 1 head coaches after taking the school to 14 straight NCAA Tournament appearances. He also led his team to the Final Four in 1992.

In his 24-year coaching career, the 52-year-old Huggins sits eighth in total wins and winning percentage among active NCAA D-I coaches with 567 career victories and a 0.767 winning percentage.

Huggins' former teams have won 20 or more games in all but four of his 24 campaigns, which include 30 or more twice. He has averaged 23.5 victories a season.

He won numerous National Coach of the Year awards during his tenure with Cincinnati and was a unanimous choice for the Conference USA Coach of the Decade.

Huggins signed three No. 1-rated junior college players and five McDonald's All-Americans to Cincinnati, while six of his last nine recruiting classes ranked among the nation's top 10.

He has collected numerous accolades on the court, but his off-the-court troubles are the reason he is no longer with the Bearcats.

His tenure at Cincinnati was marked by player arrests and Iraqi police find bodies

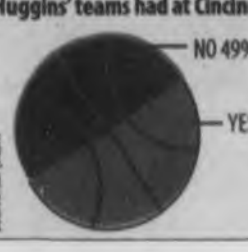
BAGHDAD, Iraq — Police found 30 corpses, most beheaded, near a village north of the capital Sunday night, in the latest wave of sectarian killings engulfing Iraq. At least 16 people were killed during a clash involving U.S. forces at a Shiite mosque in Baghdad. Elsewhere in the capital, American troops briefly detained about 10 Iraqi policemen after discovering 17 Sudanese prisoners in the facility.

Marines decline armor

HUSAYBAH, Iraq — Extra body armor has flooded in to Iraq, but many Marines here promptly stuck it in lockers or under bunks. Too heavy and cumbersome, many say. Marines already carry loads as heavy as 70 pounds when they patrol the dangerous streets. The new armor plates, while only about five pounds per set, are not worth carrying for the additional safety they are said to provide, some say.



Christian to be released

KABUL, Afghanistan — A court on Sunday dismissed the case against an Afghan man facing possible execution for converting from Islam to Christianity, officials said, paving the way for his release. The move eased pressure from the West but raised the dilemma of protecting Abdul Rahman after his release as Islamic clerics have called for him to be killed.

Making the grade

During Bob Huggins' 16 years as coach at Cincinnati, only 27 players on his teams earned degrees from the University of Cincinnati.

Should K-State be concerned about the poor graduation rates Huggins' teams had at Cincinnati?:

MONTEGO BAY, Jamaica – A fire, apparently started by a cigarette, broke out aboard a giant cruise ship as it sailed through the moonlit Caribbean, leaving one passenger dead, 11 people injured and at least 100 rooms scorched.

The Star Princess, carrying 2,690 passengers and 1,123 crew members, bore evidence of the nighttime drama as it pulled into Montego Bay's port. About 85 exterior cabins were blackened from the fire, a stark contrast to the otherwise gleaming white exterior of the ship.

VOTERS TO DECIDE ON KC SPORTS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Is Kansas City in danger of losing the Chiefs and Royals?

That seems to be the subtle but clear threat the two teams are giving the region.

As voters in Jackson County, Mo., consider a proposal on sales and business taxes that would raise about half a billion dollars for extensive renovations to Kauffman and Arrowhead stadiums, radio and TV ads are saying, "Keep the teams ..."

When pressed, the owners back away from saying they might move the teams if the vote does not go their way.

KANSANS FIND GEM AT PARK

MURFREESBORO, Ark. – A Kansas woman and her 12-year-old son have a 2.12-carat diamond to take home with them after a vacation in Arkansas.

A news release Saturday from the state Parks and Tourism Department said Jennifer Jones of Derby, Kan., and her son Jacob Ballard found the gem Friday at Crater of Diamonds State Park.

GUNMAN KILLS 6, SELF AT RAVE

SEATTLE – The private party following a "zombie rave" was winding down when a man walked out, returned to the house wearing bandoliers of shotgun shells and opened fire on the young crowd, police said.

Six people were killed and another was critically injured as he fired dozens of rounds, police said. Outside, he fatally shot himself when confronted by police.

The victims – many with their faces painted and hair dyed for the zombie-themed rave – were in their late teens and early 20s, police said. Police said they didn't know the motive and Kerlikowske said there had not been any fights or arguments at the party.

HUMAN CLONING ISSUES GROW

TOPEKA – In Greek mythology, a chimera is a fire-breathing beast with a lion's head, a goat's body and a serpent's tail.

For Kansas legislators, a chimera (pronounced ky-MEER-uh) is something else, equally repulsive to some of them. It's a human-animal hybrid, either a cell or an embryo.

Legislators didn't start worrying seriously about cloning and related issues until the latest millennium arrived, and their interest has been sporadic. But the subjects inspire the same passion – and pit some of the same people against each other – as abortion.

Huelskamp attempted to amend his proposal Wednesday to an $11.7 billion state budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1. His effort failed after some senators argued they didn't know enough about the science involved.

CONCEALED CARRY BECOMES LAW

TOPEKA – Law-abiding Kansans will be able to carry concealed guns because many of Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' fellow Democrats parted company with her on the issue.

The House voted 91-33 on Thursday to override her veto of a guns bill, giving supporters of the measure seven more votes than the needed two-thirds majority. The Senate voted Wednesday night to override, 30-10.

WAL-MART TO ADD ORGANICS

BENTONVILLE, Ark. – Wal-Mart Stores Inc. is throwing its weight behind organic products, a move that experts say could have the same lasting effect on environmental practices that Wal-Mart has had on prices by forcing suppliers and competitors to keep up.

Putting new items on the shelf, from organic cotton baby clothes to ocean fish caught in ways that don't harm the environment, is part of a broader green policy launched to meet consumer demand, cut costs for things like energy and packaging and burnish a battered reputation.

Exhibit shows art collection

By Cj Lehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One empty frame hangs on the wall at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Another 54 pieces grace the walls and offer a glimpse into the permanent collection at the museum.

Fifty-five pieces, randomly selected by computer, constitute the exhibit "1% of Art – A Random Sample from the Permanent Collection," museum registrar and collections manager Suzanne Hale said.

"We said once we got our list we couldn't edit it," she said. "We did not know about a number of things in the collection, and it takes a lot of research so we really had to look into things in order to identify them. Just even the basic information like where it came from or who it was by."

An annual inventory is done for record-keeping purposes but some pieces can't be found, Hale said. The tag beside the empty frame reads that the piece has never been seen by any current staff member.

A staff meeting comment on the inventory led to the creation of the exhibit, Hale said.

"We just finished a full, (inventory) and we were talking about how, when I do an inventory I do a 1 percent inventory, so I know how we are doing as far as keeping up with our location records, and someone said during a staff meeting about how it would be kind of fun, or funny really, to do a show like that," Hale said.

Centering around the museum's mission to become a leader in regional art, the museum collection contains mostly Kansas and other Midwestern artists' works, but not everything in the collection fits into that category, Hale said.

"We have a wide assortment of things," she said. "Things from India, things from China, just things that were offered to K-State at a time when I think we were just taking anything that was art-related because we didn't really have much of a mission."

The importance of having a strong collection was the focus of a panel discussion, "Buy, Sell, Collect," on March 16 at the museum.

"If there is no collection, there is no museum," Bill North, museum senior curator, said. "Preserving our cultural heritage by collecting is worthwhile."

Panelist Bill Tsutsui, associate professor of history at the University of Kansas, said when he and his wife realized Kansas would be their permanent home, they used art as a way to relate to the state.

"We really wanted to make a connection to Kansas, and Kansas art ended up being the way we did this," he said.

Tsutsui said his level of collecting advanced to an obsessive level quickly.

"That the collection takes on a life of its own is very significant," he said. "I don't want something; the collection wants something."

Barn sales, auctions, galleries and eBay are places Tsutsui said he finds the pieces, including prints, pottery and paintings for his collection.

"eBay is a very interesting way to find obscure things," he said. "The things we cherish most are the ones that have been the hardest to find."

As director of Kiechel Fine Art in Lincoln, Neb., panelist Vivian Kiechel said she sees people buy art from cruise ships or farm sales because they like the art but don't consider the importance of the history of the piece when trying to resell the artwork.

"You can buy what you like, but there is no reason you can't buy wisely," she said.

Beginning a collection with only $20 is possible if people know where to find art, Kiechel said.

"Look and look in your own backyard," she said. "You have the Beach museum, you have shows. It's almost a lesson in connoisseurship."

As vice president of Student Friends of the Beach Museum of Art, Beth Hesterman, senior in mass communications, said before she became involved in the group she wasn't very aware of the museum.

"I had this vague idea there was an art museum here," she said. "It was always kind of this cold bubble over here."

A junior group of the Friends of the Beach Museum of Art, Hesterman said Student Friends volunteer their time to support the museum and encourage students to visit the museum.

"You can wear your jeans," she said. "You can just come and appreciate it for whatever level of interest you have."

Program encourages instrument donation

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Youth Impacting Community has developed a project to recycle old instruments for local elementary school students.

In the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school district, students decide in fifth grade if they want participate in band.

However, some interested students are in need of instruments, said Steve Easterday, elementary music teacher with the district.

"We see 25 or 30 kids that would like to play and have no way of playing," Easterday said. "We've always done all sorts of rearranging so that they could, but the school doesn't have as many instruments as needed."

The project asks for all types and conditions of instruments. Any instrument repairs are covered by the group's endowment fund, which came from a grant from the Caroline Peine Foundation. Donors fill out a donation card and can get a tax break, Yiwen Jia, president of Youth Impacting Community, said.

Jia said Youth Impacting Community consists of Manhattan public school students, grades eight through 12. It is a youth philanthropy group that learns about non-profit organizations by helping distribute funds and grants throughout the community.

"What's cool about the program is that youth usually don't have opportunities to be active in helping their community," Jia said.

Youth Impacting Community was created three years ago by the Manhattan Community Foundation. Students in USD 383 are nominated by teachers and administrators to be in the group, but students can apply as well, Jia said.

Two campus organizations, Tau Beta Sigma and Kappa Kappa Psi, also are involved with the project. The organizations are a national honorary band sorority and fraternity, respectively. The groups were approached by Youth Impacting Community, said Amber Logan, member of Tau Beta Sigma and senior in biology.

"We were asked if we would be willing to go through the music department and any old friends from home to look for old instruments," Logan said.

Youth Impacting Community would like to reach college students who have instruments they don't use anymore, said Heather Lansdowne, youth adviser for Youth Impacting Community.

"Rather than keep them in the basement or the attic at home, we can get it in the hands of a child so they can experience music," Lansdowne said.

How to donate
Instruments can be submitted to the Manhattan High School west campus in the main office or to the Manhattan Community Foundation office on 555 Poyntz Ave., Suite 269.

All 4 K-State Goldwater nominees win

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

All four K-State nominees for the Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship were selected as winners.

Jonathan King, junior in chemical engineering; Eli Parke, junior in physics; Alyson Deines, senior in mathematics; and Amy Twite, sophomore in chemistry and microbiology, were selected for the Goldwater Scholarship, which provides up to $7,500 annually for a student's final one or two years of undergraduate studies.

The Barry M. Goldwater Scholarship and Excellence in Education Program was established in 1986 to honor Goldwater, who served for 30 years in the U.S. Senate. According to its Web site, the purpose is to award college students who intend to pursue careers in science, mathematics and engineering.

Scholarship adviser James Hohenbary said that while all four students were competitive for the scholarship, he was surprised to hear all four had won.

"The national competition is so tough, and it's always somewhat surprising to see that all four win," he said.

Hohenbary said he is pleased with the results and thinks all four winners are good students.

"The thing for my position when you work with all four students in the application process and get to know how good they are, it's a relief when you hear they all won," he said.

King said he will use the scholarship for tuition, room and board. He said he met with Hohenbary on a regular basis to review his application and essay for the scholarship.

"I know that K-State has done really well with Goldwater scholarships, and I am so grateful I got to work with Hohenbary, who has figured out how to help students win these scholarships," said King, who plans to earn a doctorate in biomaterials engineering.

Parke said he was somewhat surprised when he heard he had won the scholarship.

"The competition for it is pretty tough, so I wasn't 100-percent sure I'd get the scholarship," he said.

Parke said he plans to earn a doctorate in plasma physics and conduct research on controlled nuclear fusion. He said he will use the scholarship for tuition.

Deines said she will use the scholarship to aid in her undergraduate research on number theory. She also said she plans to use the money to take more upper-level classes to prepare for graduate school.

After studying abroad, Deines said she saw research that students from other universities were doing.

"It made me realize that K-State has a really strong research program," said Deines, who plans to earn a doctorate in math.

Twite said she plans to use the scholarship to cover tuition, room and board costs. She said she also plans to earn a doctorate in materials chemistry and conduct research and teach at a major university.

Twite said she was eager to hear that she had been awarded a Goldwater Scholarship.

"I was surprised, but kind of enthusiastic," she said. "It will help me get into a graduate school."

President Jon Wefald said it is an impressive accomplishment when a university can submit four nominees for a scholarship and all four entries win.

"When I heard last Tuesday, I thought to myself 'our faculty and staff are very exceptional,'" Wefald said. "It is extraordinary that our students, most of whom are from Kansas communities, are winning these prestigious scholarships."

TO THE POINT

Children benefit from donations of instruments

In elementary school, many students have the opportunity to play a musical instrument for the first time.

School band programs teach the students what they need to know, as long as the students have an instrument.

However, instruments are not inexpensive. Many cost $500 or more, and renting one can be expensive as well.

The high cost prevents many students from getting a chance to see if they would like to be a professional trumpet player some day. Many families cannot afford to pay $500 for an instrument when they are worrying about paying rent.

Often, schools do not have enough used instruments, which forces teachers to juggle playing time between students. This can be embarrassing and unfair to students.

That is why donating used instruments is important. Too often, we let an old clarinet or flute sit in the closet at our parents' house gathering dust when it could bring joy to a child in need.

In Manhattan there are opportunities to donate instruments. Contact local community service organizations or elementary schools. There almost always is a need for donated items.

When making a donation, think about how a child will soon have the opportunity to experience the excitement of learning something new.

A woman's choice

MEGAN GREEN

The law makes abortion illegal except if a pregnancy endangers a woman's life. Usually, abortion is a hot topic many will not discuss, but I could not read this article and not let everyone know how horrible this could be for a woman's future.

I only can assume that following this law, many other states will write and pass laws against abortion. I understand the side of pro-lifers – I agree that women should be responsible for their actions and that killing an unborn child isn't totally ethical.

If a woman is responsible, studying at school and trying to get ahead, yet gets pregnant and knows she cannot do any good for the child or for herself, why isn't that counted as looking out for a child who potentially could be put in a horrible situation?

And what if an impoverished woman who cannot spend $30 a month on birth control gets pregnant because a condom breaks? Or what if a woman is raped or is the victim of incest? Why should she have to have that baby and stare at the face of her attacker every day?

In the South Dakota law, the only time abortion is legal is if the mother's life is in danger. That means more women who cannot provide will have children and give them to orphanages.

How is it better for a child to feel so unloved and unwanted that he spends the majority of his young life in an orphanage until he becomes an adult and is thrown out into the world? How will that make life better?

If a woman has the money, a supportive partner and is responsible enough to take care of a child, then she should keep the child.

But if a woman has no money, can barely support herself and has an abusive or absent partner, what woman would want to bring a child into that environment?

Of course, we all know there is only one solution to this problem – abstinence.

But let's be honest, how many 20-year-olds do you know who are virgins, or plan to stay that way until they get married? And how often have you sat through a class in high school that taught everyone how to have safe sex?

I think it might be better if South Dakota decided to educate high school students on the benefits of safe sex not on banning abortions.

And I don't want to hear from a man that he is pro-life unless he is planning on marrying a woman if she accidently gets pregnant. It's easier for men – they can leave or not help with raising the baby if they so choose.

Maybe we should make that illegal – men cannot leave a woman they impregnate. Then it would be fair for women to have to keep the baby.

Let's look at this another way. If women cannot obtain legal abortions, then they will go somewhere else – underground – and do it themselves. This makes life for the mother and for the child more dangerous, since the death rate would increase when both mother and child die.

I hope this is one of few laws making abortion illegal. Otherwise, life for women will be a lot scarier. Let's not go backward in time. Instead, let's learn from what we knew when we decided abortion should be legal: women should have a choice.

Illegal immigrants deserve to be treated fairly

The problem with the illegal immigration debate is the failure of some to see illegal immigrants as more than elements of an economy. Moreover, they fail to see them as human beings.

DANIEL KIRKSEY

For those with that view, the solution is quite simple: We need to remove all illegal immigrants and set up boundaries to prevent new ones from entering the United States.

This view does not exclude the possibility of a work program for non-citizens. As President Bush recently remarked, "If you are doing a job that Americans won't do, you're welcome here for a period of time to do that job."

Those with this perspective are essentially taking a Machiavellian stance on the function of our government by attempting to take emotion and ethics out of the picture. They see illegal immigrants as a population of 12 million who either hurt us or help us.

To them, illegal immigrants are nothing more than calculations of risks, benefits and dollars. They are nameless entities near non-existence; they are not the next-door-neighbor Juan Q. Public, who has an entire family to clothe and feed.

Implied by President Bush's statement, even legal immigrants only can have what we throw away and only for a little while.

What does this suggest for illegal immigrants looking for a way to live?

The cold-hearted nature of this perspective is self-evident. It labels illegal immigrants as masses and not as individuals, and this way of thinking always denies exceptions, raising a multitude of ethical issues.

The other not-so-evident problem with this form of thinking is the contradiction in theory of those who hold it.

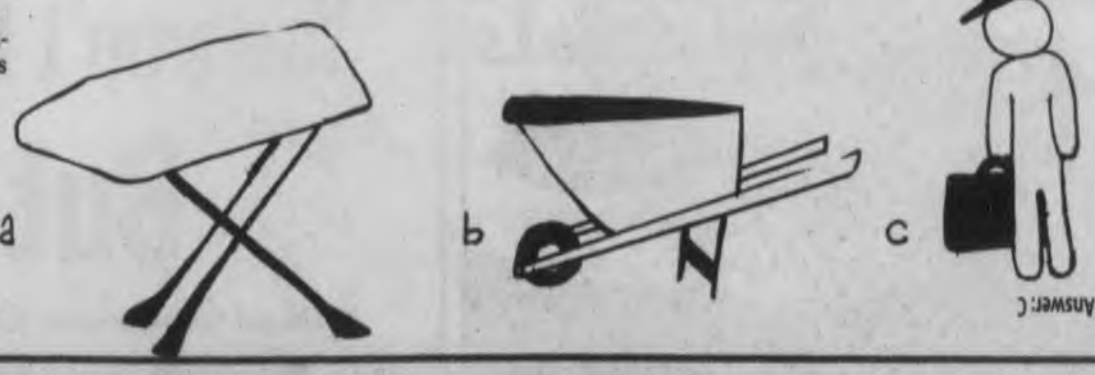
The people attempting to deny the role of ethics in government that forces a view of illegal immigrants as real human beings – and not as numbers – are the same people formerly enraged by Bill Clinton and all of his tomfoolery.

People wanted him out of office for ethical reasons and not for an inability to run a nation.

I only point this out to show the contradiction of those people once esteeming ethics in government now denying it in their solutions for immigration.

I do, however, see the necessity of this cold-hearted approach to an extent. Illegal immigration is causing some problems. Therefore, it is necessary to fix the problems, and being tougher on illegal immigrants is one way of doing that.

However, there must be a balance between the pragmatic approach and the ethical approach. We must not forget the people with whom we are dealing actually are human beings with no more control over the circumstances into which they were born than you or I.



Our government currently is undertaking this issue, and it must not forget the interest of humanity as a whole, which is always more important than the sole interest of a state.

In the United States we have an abundance of resources and opportunities of which we do not take complete advantage.

Reasons for this range from laziness to ill-founded pride, but the reality is that we don't want these opportunities and others need them to survive.

Project recruits teachers for western Kansas

By Jaci Boydston
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

With the help of a five-year, $8.7-million grant from the U.S. Department of Education, the Equity and Access Partnership is working to provide better education for children in western Kansas.

The project, Enhancing Teacher Quality Through Multi-Institutional Partnerships, uses different forms of distance education to recruit potential teachers who want to teach in western Kansas and provide additional training and resources for current teachers.

The goal is to have a community of established, qualified teachers who can address the needs of the diverse student population in western Kansas, particularly the large number of students with limited English-speaking abilities.

One of the partnership's goals is to recruit students who want to earn education degrees and become teachers in western Kansas, said Gail Shroyer, project co-director and professor of elementary education.

"In the western part of the state, we get teachers to go out there, but if someone is born and raised in Kansas City, they might not want to stay in western Kansas," Shroyer said.

To combat the problem of teacher retention, the partnership aims to recruit paraprofessionals in western Kansas who want to become teachers and have families in that area, said Sally Yahnke, project co-director and associate professor of secondary education.

Upon earning an education degree, these non-traditional students would be more likely to stay in western Kansas longer than a year or two, Yahnke said.

Because of the students, the program recruits do not have the flexibility of most traditional college students.

The partnership is creating uniform class standards and curriculum guidelines for K-State and the three partner community colleges: Dodge City, Garden City and Seward County.

This would allow students to more easily complete an education degree in four years and allow them to stay in western Kansas for half of that time, Shroyer said.

"Students go two years at a community college, and then they transfer to K-State, and it often takes them four more years to graduate from K-State," Shroyer said. "Students who go to community colleges often have to repeat courses. It's a long-standing problem."

By implementing the same teaching standards for classes at the community colleges and at K-State and by creating specific curriculum guides for community college students who plan to complete education degrees at K-State, Shroyer said she hopes more students can graduate in four years total.

In addition to the "2+2" program, the partnership offers a teaching licensing program using entirely distance-based education.

Students spend all four years in western Kansas, taking a combination of community college classes, classes taught in western Kansas by professors affiliated with K-State's College of Education and online classes taught by K-State faculty.

This program is only for elementary education with English as a Second Language emphasis, since teachers with ESL and Spanish skills are in such high demand in the area, Shroyer said.

Besides recruiting potential teachers, the partnership also helps existing teachers expand their areas of expertise.

Because the teacher shortage causes some teachers to teach outside their specialized areas – Shroyer gave the example of middle-school math teachers required to teach high-school math – the Equity and Access Partnership offers summer certification programs for teachers to gain licensing in different areas.

Three summers worth of classes are required to renew licenses, and 2006 will be the second summer for the program.

The partnership's programs aim to benefit western Kansas students by increasing the number of qualified, stable teachers in the area. Shroyer said this is especially important for students struggling to learn English, because their situation requires extra attention.

"People say, 'Oh, everybody can speak math; it's its own language,' but math is like learning two languages for students who are still learning English," Shroyer said.

Local businesses experience change in atmosphere during student holidays

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Dave Johnson, senior in sociology, shoots for the one ball Friday during a slow night of business at Fat's Bar & Grill.

When K-State students leave Manhattan for spring break or other student vacations, Aggieville businesses experience a different amount of customers, said Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association.

"A lot of times there's kind of a misconception in the summer, that when students leave, Aggieville just kind of withers up and dies," Sieben said. "It doesn't – it's a different atmosphere."

However, several local business owners said they see the lack of student patronage when classes are not in session.

Diane Meredith, owner of the Dusty Bookshelf, 700 N. Manhattan Ave., and co-owner of Acme Gift, 1227 Moro St., and Thread, 1224 Moro St., said the amount of business at her three stores during student holidays varies.

"When there are 10,000 people missing from town, you notice," she said. "It's definitely a bit more relaxed."

The atmosphere in the stores also is more relaxed for employees during student breaks, and they do things like order pizza at work, Meredith said.

"It's no fun to be the ones left behind," she said. "This is about all you can do on a week like this."

"It's a week when people have a little more time to sit down and actually enjoy reading," she said.

While the Dusty Bookshelf was busier than normal, other Aggieville businesses like Fat's Bar & Grill, 1209 Laramie St., and Bluestem Bistro, 1219 Moro St., noticed a decline in business.

The snowy weather that occurred at the beginning of spring break was somewhat to blame for decreased business, said Ryan Bramhall, owner of Fat's Bar & Grill.

"This weather hasn't done us any good," Bramhall said. "It kept a lot of people in, especially on Monday when the weather hit."

Business started to pick up again after the storm passed through, Bramhall said.

The influx of soldiers at Fort Riley might contribute to the increase of sales the bar has seen overall this year, he said.

Business at Bluestem Bistro also got off to a slow start last week, said Kevin Peirce, owner of Bluestem Bistro.

"Looking down the street Monday, it was kind of a ghost town," Peirce said.

However, Manhattan residents, out-of-town visitors and students who remained in Manhattan during spring break caused sales to pick up again by the week's end, Peirce said.

TO THE EDITOR

Hiding orientation unfair to homosexuals in the military

Editor,

I disagree with Mr. Bill Vick's letter to the editor on March 16.

In it he says, "Gays are allowed to serve [in the military services] with the stipulation that they keep their [sexual] orientation to themselves."

Does that mean that they will not go to dinner, movies, dances, bars, etc., with members of the opposite sex?

So, it does not seem eminently fair to me.

Common sense tells us that stipulation extends to heterosexual service members. That is eminently fair."

Now, let me get this straight (pun intended).

Oh, by the way, ask all the Vietnam draftees if they thought military service was a privilege.

A new identity for K-State

ANTHONY MENDOZA

When Director of Athletics Tim Weiser hired Ron Prince as the new football coach to replace Bill Snyder, Prince said all the right things.

The only difference is that new men's basketball coach Bob Huggins has proven his craft outside a press conference.

On the other hand, Prince is still an unknown.

Weiser made the right decision; the only decision he should have made was to hire someone of Huggins' ability available to take over a program like K-State.

Where else are you going to find a coach who has taken a team to 14 straight NCAA Tournaments?

K-State has not been in the tournament since 1996, and year by year it seems to get closer to it. But unfortunately, it is the National Invitational Tournament, and it is right to be the 66th-best team in the nation.

With Huggins, the Wildcats' basketball program is about to tread uncharted waters. Not even the football program can create as much hype as what one year with Huggins will create for the Wildcat athletic department.

Reports are that ESPN has already contacted K-State about the possibility of airing K-State's first game of the year with its new coach.

I'm pretty sure Mike Anderson, Missouri's new coach, or Greg McDermott, the new coach at Iowa State, are not garnering the same national attention, which has been brought upon the unknown town of Manhattan, Kan., after the hiring of Huggins.

As much as students, professors and residents want to believe, college athletics is not as pure as everyone believes.

You can look at Huggins' graduation rate and have concerns.

His players have also been in trouble, but there is one thing Huggins does that overshadows everything else: he wins, so players want to play for him.

Prior to the new hire, do you even think someone like O.J. Mayo from Cincinnati's North College Hill High School, considered the No. 1 prospect in the 2007 class and the next LeBron James, would ever consider K-State? No way.

But with Huggins, both instances are possible, as is bringing Mayo's high school teammate, Bill Walker, who just happens to be the No. 2 prospect in the same class according to Rivals.com.

Top this off with the fact that 7-foot-2 senior center Jason Bennett, a highly touted post player from Arlington Country Day High School in Jacksonville, Fla., is now a possibility for K-State next season.

This is not because of K-State's former winning tradition or facilities, but because of Huggins.

Over the weekend, literally, K-State became a basketball school.

Fans are interested once again. Deposits to secure seats for the upcoming season are being taken. Basketball talk has pushed football to the side on the message boards, even though the spring game is less than a month away and the first (probably) ever open practice is four days away.

Men's basketball at K-State has become a business once again, not just a fledgling entity in a corporation dominated by the success of the football program.

Wildcats advance to Final Four

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats advanced to their first-ever Women's National Invitational Final Four with a 77-63 victory against the Nebraska Cornhuskers on Friday in front of 6,258 at Bramlage Coliseum.

Junior Claire Coggins led all scorers with 22 points and made six 3-pointers, while freshman JoAnn Hamlin added 20 points to give the Wildcats their second win in three tries against the Cornhuskers. Freshman Shalee Lehning finished with eight assists to give her 176 on the year, braking Mary Jo Miller's single season assist record of 175.

Lehning said her teammates had something to do with the assist record.

"It's a great honor, but I have to give credit to my teammates because they are the ones making the shots," said Lehning, who also grabbed 11 rebounds. "They make my job pretty easy."

Coggins said advancing to the Final Four of the WNIT was a big step for the Wildcats.

"It just shows everybody in America that this is a great team," Coggins said. "We were very young this year, and I can't even describe how proud of this team I am."

Both the Wildcats (22-10) and the Cornhuskers (19-13) struggled offensively for the first 15 minutes of the first half combining for just 14 field goals, with Nebraska leading 22-17 with 5:09 remaining in the first half.

After the Cornhuskers built their five-point lead, the Wildcats caught fire, scoring 10 unanswered points in two minutes. K-State would finish out the half on an 18-4 run and take a 35-26 lead into the locker room.

"That (the 18-4 run) was just big," coach Deb Patterson said. "We had squandered a lot of possessions, and we addressed it in the huddle, and the team just came back out with a renewed purpose to boarding ball and getting stops.

"We were able to initiate the transition game during that period, and once you

Streak snapped

Freshman Justin Murray came on to relieve starting pitcher Chase Bayuk and threw 5.2 innings to hold Missouri to one run after Bayuk allowed five runs in the first inning. K-State lost the conference opening series to Missouri two games to one.

Two Missouri losses drop K-State to 1-2 in conference

By Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The early innings proved costly for the No. 24-ranked Wildcats Sunday as the Missouri Tigers defeated K-State for the second-straight day to take the three-game series two games to one.

Missouri scored five runs in the first two innings and held off K-State down the stretch to win 6-3 at Taylor Stadium. K-State fell to 17-3 on the season and 1-2 in Big 12 Conference play, while Missouri improved to 15-8 overall and 5-1 in the Big 12.

K-State pulled within two runs in the fifth, but Missouri reliever David Cales (2-0) was the difference, shutting out the Wildcats and striking out five batters in 3.2 innings.

Freshman Justin Murray kept the Wildcats within reach as he threw 5.2 innings in relief of starter sophomore Chase Bayuk. Murray gave up just one run on five hits and struck out two batters. Bayuk (4-1) suffered the loss after lasting just 1.2 innings and giving up five runs on five hits and three walks.

K-State started off strong, taking an early 1-0 lead in the first when freshman Tyler Link and senior Brandon Farr began the game with singles up the middle. Senior Joe Roundy's grounder to third went through Brock Bond's legs to allow Link to score and give the Wildcats a 1-0 lead. K-State left the bases loaded in the inning.

Three walks and a Bayuk throwing error were all the Tigers needed to score three runs on just one hit in the bottom half of the first. K-State came within one run in the second as freshman Rob Vaughn doubled and later scored on a Farr two-out single to right field. Mizzou added two more runs in the second to up its lead to 5-2.

Cats look to extend success in California

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team hasn't played a tournament since the General Jim Hackler Invitational on March 12-13, where the Wildcats tied for sixth after shooting a three-round total of 27-over 891, their first sub-900 score of the spring season.

The team will play again today and Tuesday at the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson, Calif. The Stevinson Ranch Golf Club and the University of Colorado will be host to the eighth-annual invitational, and the players from the 13-team field will play on what GolfDigest calls one of the "best places to play" in California, with only Pebble Beach ranking higher.

The 7,206-yard, par-72 course has been kind to the Wildcats in recent years, and coach Tim Norris sees no reason why that trend won't continue.

"This tournament has traditionally been a good one for us," Norris said. "I think the break was good for the guys, because they did not have to focus on their academics, and we were able to arrive here earlier, which gave us more time to practice on the West Coast."

For three-straight years K-State has finished in second place in the tournament.

The Stevinson Ranch has been a good course for K-State individuals as well. The Wildcats have had 14 top-20 finishers, eight top-10 finishers and five top-five finishers. Senior Ben Kern placed second in both 2004 and 2005 and will try to improve on his finishes from the past two seasons.

Fellow senior and Olathe, Kan., native Tyler Cummins comes off a performance at the Hackler that was good enough to lead the Wildcats and put him in an 11th-place tie.

Cummins said spring break provided a much-needed rest.

"I got to go home and play with my dog C.G., and it was nice to take my mind off of school and everything and get ready for the final couple of months," Cummins said. "I am happy we left Kansas on Tuesday because it was snowing, and we have been able to practice a lot more than usual because we have been out here (in California) for four or five days."

Cummins said he is confident with his game and with the way his teammates are playing. He said the team has a legitimate shot at bringing home a win.

"The course is in really good shape," Cummins said. "I have really been scoring well the past few practice rounds, and four out of six of us have played here before, so that should give us an advantage."

Sophomore Kyle Yonke and freshmen Robert Streb and Joe Kinney round out the five Wildcats participating for the team. Senior Jonathan James will compete as an individual, and his score will not affect the overall team score.

Kinney said the course fits the Wildcats' game well, because there will be a large wind factor, a staple of Kansas weather.

"The four days to practice out here helped out, and the course is going to be play to our advantage because there are no trees," Kinney said. "So it's going to get pretty windy, and that's all we play back in Kansas."

1-MINUTE DRILL

The Associated Press

GLF | Ames dominates in final round of Players

PONTA VEDRA BEACH, Fla. - Stephen Ames delivered a major performance Sunday on the treacherous TPC at Sawgrass, blowing away the strongest field in golf with a 5-under 67 to win The Players Championship by six shots and earn an unlikely trip to the Masters.

Ames

Ames finished at 14-under 274, six shots clear of two-time U.S. Open champion Retief Goosen, who closed with a 69.

He earned $1.44 million for his second PGA Tour victory, and also got a three-year exemption to the Masters.

BKC | Anderson hired as new Missouri coach

COLUMBIA, Mo. - Mike Anderson's swarming style of defense and fast-paced play are coming to the University of Missouri.

Anderson

He was hired as Missouri's basketball coach Sunday, taking over following Quin Snyder's resignation last month.

Anderson, who led Alabama-Birmingham to a 24-9 record and an NCAA tournament appearance this season, is the first permanent black head coach at Missouri, though Melvin Watkins, a Snyder assistant, served as interim coach after Snyder's resignation.

As head coach at UAB for four years, Anderson had an 89-41 record with three NCAA tournament appearances. UAB lost to Kentucky in the first round this season.

In his introductory news conference, Anderson said he has already spoken with eight Missouri players. He said they are eager to experience his up-tempo, scrappy style.

WASHINGTON (AP) - George Mason is no longer the cute little underdog. The Patriots, by golly, are going to the Final Four.

Skinn

The suburban commuter school from Fairfax, Va., beat top-seeded Connecticut 86-84 in overtime Sunday in the Washington Regional final, ending the stranglehold that big-time programs have enjoyed for 27 years. They lacked in size, athleticism and history relative to their opponent, but the 11th-seeded Patriots made up for it with tenacity.

Buoyed by a partisan crowd and playing some 20 miles from their campus, George Mason rallied after trailing by 12 late in the first half and nine early in the second. The Patriots hit six straight 3-pointers in the second half, shot 5-for-6 in overtime and outrebounded UConn 37-34 even though the Huskies have three starters taller than any of the Patriots' frontcourt players.

The Patriots became the second double-digit seed to make the Final Four, matching LSU's run, also as an 11th seed, in 1986. Patriots guard Tony Skinn said coach Jim Larranaga fired up his players by telling them that UConn's players didn't even know which conference George Mason is.

BSB | Bonds could rest until beginning of season

Bonds had appointments scheduled with two doctors Sunday for evaluation on his inflamed elbow, and the San Francisco Giants were hopeful the slugger would resume on-field baseball activities Monday.

Spring break tour stop

Band braves poor weather, performs to a packed house at Dusty Bookshelf venue

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It was officially spring, but the weather did not reflect that.

The blustery cold, however, did not keep fans from packing the Dusty Bookshelf Tuesday to watch a performance by Page France.

The group has been on tour for about a month and has recently played venues in Texas, Mike Nau, lead singer, said. They stopped in Manhattan on their way to the West Coast, he said.

Page France formed two years ago when Nau and good friend Clinton Jones began recording a collection of songs, he said.

The band also includes vocalist Whitney McGraw, as well as a varied cast of friends and instrumentalists from Maryland that help create Page France's sound in the studio and on the stage, Nau said.

The band has since recorded two EPs, "Pear" and "Sister Pinecone," as well as a new full-length, "Hello, Dear Wind," which was released last October, he said.

Nau said he hopes Page France can continue to push itself artistically through each of its subsequent albums.

"We hope to continue to make records that are different from the others," Nau said. "When we can't do that anymore, we'll maybe call it quits, but until then we'll continue to record and tour and have a blast doing it."

Joey Murphy, Manhattan resident and musician, along with Tyler Gregory, was one of the acoustic acts that opened for Page France on Tuesday.

Murphy said he was also the primary correspondent who organized the event and brought Page France to the Dusty Bookshelf.

Murphy has shows about once a month at the Dusty Bookshelf but would like to see the number of shows at the store increase in the future, he said.

Murphy said he felt the show went very well and was pleased the band agreed to play. Page France was the first full band to play there.

"I thought the show was good; it was good to have (Page France) here because we don't just want acoustic music," he said.

Murphy also said he was happy with the large turnout at the show, especially since it occurred over spring break.

Krysten Yates, sophomore in open option, said she is a fan of Page France. Yates also assists with shows at the Dusty Bookshelf by helping set up for the concerts and working the door, she said.

Yates said she was delighted to have the opportunity to see Page France play in Manhattan.

"I thought the show was amazing; I really enjoyed it," Yates said. "I'm glad the band came through. Their next stop is in Tucson, Ariz., so I was really excited to see them come out of their way."

Kendell Lolley and Chris Elea were two Manhattan High students who attended the show. Both said they enjoyed the show.

"I liked the audience interaction from the band," Elea said.

Lolley echoed the sentiment.

"I really liked how (Page France) talked with the audience throughout the show," she said. "It really made it seem like they were playing just for you."

To find out more about Page France, visit its Web site at www.pagefrance.net.

Film shoot mistaken for hostage situation

A movie set at the downtown post office turned all too real for a group of high school filmmakers. Members of the high school Spanish club were shooting a movie Thursday night when the police showed up believing a hostage crisis was going on inside the post office.

But apparently someone saw the students carrying toy guns into the building on Centre Street, which is the heart of the town's historical district. When they couldn't get an answer to calls placed inside the building, they assumed the worst.

When a group of students left the post office, they were ordered to get on the ground, face-down.

Postmaster Ron Steedley had given permission for the school group to use the post office after hours to make a movie, "Rolling Thunder." Steedley said he didn't think the students' movie would frighten anyone.

Tom Cruise furniture hopping once again

The megastar was the guest of honor at Yahoo's quarterly "Influential Speakers" event Tuesday in Sunnyvale, Calif., bantering with chief executive Terry Semel and answering questions from the crowd.

After an impromptu arm-wrestling match with Semel, Cruise jestingly recreated his "Oprah" sofa-hopping episode, this time on a chair, to trumpet his joy about his fiancée and their soon-to-arrive offspring. Then he brought the very pregnant Holmes onto the stage, where he beamed and patted her round belly.

And, yes, he then sealed the interlude with a kiss.

THIS WEEK... A look at events that occurred during this week in history, other bizarre holidays, happenings

TODAY National Joe day

National Joe Day is a chance to change your name, if only for today.

Many people do not like their given name. They wish they could change it. A few actually do. On National Joe Day, it is perfectly okay to have everyone call you "Joe".

Why Joe, and not Bob or Mike or Radcliffe? Simply, because everyone likes the name Joe. If you are called Joe today, we know that you're "Joe cool"!

This works well for the men out there. What about the ladies? Go with Josephine or Jody.

TUESDAY 1979: Nuclear accident at Three Mile Island

At 4 a.m. on March 28, 1979, the worst accident in the history of the U.S. nuclear power industry began when a pressure valve in the Unit-2 reactor at Three Mile Island fails to close.

At the height of the crisis, plant workers were exposed to unhealthy levels of radiation.

Ever since the accident at Three Mile Island, not a single new nuclear power plant has been ordered in the United States.

WEDNESDAY Festival of smoke, mirrors day

Smoke and Mirrors Day is a day of illusions. The term "smoke and mirrors" means something is not really as it appears to be. People often put up smoke and mirrors to hide something. This day is also referred to as the Festival of Smoke and Mirrors. The actual history of the festival unknown, but who needs historical facts to have fun?

THURSDAY 1981: Reagan shot

On March 30, 1981, President Ronald Reagan was shot in the chest outside a Washington, D.C., hotel by a deranged drifter named John Hinckley Jr.

The president had just finished addressing a labor meeting at the Washington Hilton Hotel and was walking with his entourage to his limousine when Hinckley, standing among a group of reporters, fired six shots at the president, hitting Reagan and three of his attendants.

FRIDAY Bunsen burner day

Bunsen Burner Day celebrates the birthday of its creator. German chemist Robert Wilhelm Eberhard von Bunsen was born on March 31, 1811. And, you guessed it, von Bunsen created the Bunsen Burner.

In case you forgot, the Bunsen Burner is a long, hollow tube. Gas and air are combined to create a hot flame. The burner is used in a wide range of scientific and laboratory projects.

Spend a few minutes today to appreciate the value of this important scientific tool. We will let you determine how many minutes to spend in reflection.

Late surge helps Cats place 4th in Arizona tournament

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's golf team fired its lowest 18-hole score of the year in the final round of the Mountain View Collegiate Invitational.

Junior Helene Robert tied for third with a one-under par 215.

Sophomore Michelle Regan had a personal best in the final round with a four-under 68 after shooting 75-81 in the first two rounds. The individual winner was Adriana Zwanck of the University of Arizona.

Zwanck did not relinquish the lead she had going into the final round.

As a team, K-State placed fourth after ending in ninth place Saturday.

The University of Kansas won the tournament. Taking second was the University of Nebraska, and in third was Northwestern University.

Coach Kristi Knight said she was pleased with the way her players finished and hopes they use this type of tournament as a springboard for the rest of the season.

"I'm really proud of them to finish strong," she said. "This is a golf course that, in good conditions, if you can hit the ball solid, you can score well.

"Any time you go from ninth to fourth, that's good."

Individually for K-State at the invitational, Regan tied for 14th with a 13-over 226.

Playing as an individual was freshman Krista Nelson, who placed 57th with a 43-over par 256.

Knight said there were a few problems with the game in Hawaii.

"Two out of the three rounds were good," she said. "We just couldn't get enough of the people going at the same time."

The finish was the problem for the Wildcats, Knight said.

"It was not a great finish for us at Hawaii," she said. "It was a mediocre tournament for us."

K-State loses 2 California games, prepares for Iowa State match

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team had a rough stay in California, losing 4-3 to both San Diego and Long Beach State.

K-State lost the doubles point for the first time since Feb. 18 against BYU. Sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia and freshman Maria Perevoschikova won the Wildcats' only doubles match at the No. 2 position.

"San Diego was the more winnable match of the two," coach Steve Bietau said, "but unfortunately we didn't play well enough in the doubles."

K-State then lost 4-3 to Long Beach State, which is ranked 20th in the nation.

The 49ers proved to be a more talented team, Bietau said.

"Long Beach State was just tougher," Bietau said. "Even in the doubles we could have done more, but they just outplayed us."

Perevoschikova, freshman Katerina Kudlackova and sophomore Fernanda Da Valle played solidly in both duel matches, going undefeated in singles play.

"Our depth came through for us," Bietau said.

Bietau said he was pleased to see the improvement from three young players.

"I hope it's a progress thing," Bietau said. "That's two freshmen and a sophomore out there. It's week in and week out, and they don't get a lot of chance to catch their breath."

Senior Jessica Simosa dropped two singles matches, both in split sets.

"Simosa continued to play well," Bietau said. "With the KU match, that makes three matches in a row where she has lost in split sets."

However, there is no need to panic yet, Bietau said.

"If she continues to play at this level, then she's going to win," Bietau said.

The change of scenery and the time off should prepare the Wildcats for a late-season run, Bietau said.

"Sometimes it's good to get out of town and see someplace different," Bietau said. "Hopefully they'll be ready to go again on Monday."

K-State (6-6, 2-2) starts practice again today in preparation for a home match against Iowa State on April 1.

Tracksters qualify for regionals

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At the first two meets of the 2006 outdoor track and field season, the K-State men's and women's track team qualified 15 athletes to compete in the NCAA Midwest Regional.

At the Jim Click Shoot-Out at the University of Arizona last weekend, the Wildcats regionally qualified 12 athletes, including a record-setting performance by Lisi Maurer.

Maurer beat her closest competitor by nearly one second to win the 100-meter hurdles in 13.40, a K-State record.

However, the time is not a personal best for Maurer. The Salzburg, Austria, native ran a 13.24 at the Euro Under-23 Championships in Erfurt, Germany, in 2005.

Maurer also ran the third leg of the regional qualifying 4x400-meter relay team. Maurer, sophomore Donniece Parrish and juniors Shunte Thomas and Monique Coleman finished first in 3:39.04.

Thomas and Parrish both qualified in the 200-meter dash, in 23.75 and 23.94, respectively. In the field, sophomore Marianne Schlachter and junior Candice Mills regionally qualified in the triple and long jumps, respectively.

On the men's side, three athletes won events, and two others finished second. Freshman Scott Sellers won his outdoor debut as a Wildcat in the high jump with a jump of 7 feet, 2 1/2 inches.

The jump stands as the 10th-best in K-State history.

Decorated senior distance runner Christian Smith came off his championship indoor season with a win in the 800-meter run in 1:49.59. The national indoor champion in the mile has regionally qualified in the 800 meters in the first outdoor meet for the last two seasons.

The men's 4x100-meter relay team also qualified for the regional meet.

The squad of junior Preston Taylor, senior Avantae Arrington, freshman Val Taylor and junior Casey Becker finished in 40.02 seconds, the best K-State time since April 2004.

Freshman Tevan Everett finished second in the 400 meters in 47.10 seconds in his first outdoor race as a Wildcat, and senior Coby Cost finished second in the hammer throw with a distance of 186 feet, 5 inches.

The track team will be back in action on April 1 at the UTEP Springtime Invitational in El Paso, Texas.

Fans in Bramlage Coliseum listen to newly-hired coach Bob Huggins as he addresses the media Thursday afternoon. The press conference was open to the public.

COACH | Assistants to be selected soon; recruitment to begin quickly

NCAA rules violations, including poor graduation rates of his players, which landed the school on two years' probation in 1998 after the NCAA concluded there was a lack of institutional control. He also was arrested in June 2004 for a DUI, and the police videotape of his field sobriety test was shown nationally.

Huggins said his teams are run in a positive manner with no intent on violating policies.

"You can call anybody at the NCAA, and they will tell you that they feel as good about me as anybody in college basketball," Huggins said.

K-State President Jon Wefald said Huggins will bring in quality players who plan on working hard.

"Everybody that we talked to about Bob has said they liked him and felt he was an excellent coach and a good person," Wefald said. "What we have here today in coach Huggins is a coach that can do a great job for us not only as a coach, but also as a recruiter, and he will do a good job of bringing in outstanding student-athletes that are going to go to class and that are going to graduate."

Recruiting and hiring assistants are things Huggins said he will address immediately, and he said he will have his assistants squared away soon.

Even though Huggins cannot talk about recruiting because it is against NCAA regulations, the Associated Press has reported that two highly-sought recruits from Ohio planned to follow Huggins wherever he ends up.

High school junior O.J. Mayo, a two-time AP Mr. Basketball in Ohio, said he and Cincinnati North College Hill teammate Bill Walker might sign with whoever hires Huggins.

"That could be a possibility," Mayo told the AP. "At the same time, we have to see where he ends up, what the school's fan base is like, see what the fans think about him and make sure everything is great."

When asked about how far he can take the Wildcats next year, he used a quote from former President John F. Kennedy.

"Why settle for second when first is available."

"You are not trying to teach people the right thing if you say you are playing for second," Huggins said. "We have never played for second, we have always played for first, and as long as I continue to be in this wonderful profession then I will play for first."

In Manhattan many fans, including Linda Weis, have chosen to forgive Huggins for his checkered past.

"I know about those things, but that's prevalent throughout all of athletics," said Weis, a Manhattan resident for more than 40 years. "I think you have to be well informed regarding what the actual facts are.

"Quite honestly, I have not heard one person who was disappointed in the selection."

Weis said now that Huggins is the coach, she thinks K-State will not only make the 2007 NCAA Tournament, but also defeat Kansas for the first time at Bramlage Coliseum.

"I think it's a given," she said.

Weis and K-State associate professor of mass communications Steve Smethers were two of about 300 people at Thursday's press conference to announce the hiring of Huggins, which was open to the public.

"Personally, I'm not bothered by Bob Huggins' past," Smethers said. "What I like about his past is that he is the eighth-winningest coach among active coaches."

Lt. Col. Andy Parker, a Cincinnati native who will be stationed in Fort Riley for another 18 months, wore a Bearcat sweatshirt to the press conference.

"I'm so excited about coach Huggins that I might become a K-State fan," Parker said. "Would I have bought tickets to come watch K-State basketball? Probably not. Now, I'm going to come to some of the games, for sure."

create a couple of easy scoring opportunities for yourself, it changes the feel of the game."

Defensively in the first half, K-State held Nebraska's Kiera Hardy to just five points on 2-of-11 shooting and freshman Kelsey Griffin to just nine first-half points.

Dietz said her goal and K-State's goal against Nebraska was to stop Hardy.

"We came out and played hard and defended her well all the way around," Dietz said.

Coggins said she gave herself a pep-talk at halftime, after shooting just 2-of-10 from the floor in the first half.

"I just said, 'I need to be here for my teammates, and I can't keep missing all these shots,'" Coggins said. "The first half was ridiculous. I just got in a groove, and it was time to put some shots in."

Although the Cornhuskers would cut the lead to 10, 69-59, with 1:58 remaining, K-State went 4-of-6 from the free-throw line down the stretch to give the Wildcats the win.

K-State will take on Western Kentucky (27-6) in the semifinals of the WNIT at 7 p.m. Tuesday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Wildcats climbed to 5-3 in the fifth when sophomore Matt Marasco reached on a fielder's choice with the bases loaded, but the Tigers got out of the tight spot when Brett Scott grounded out to second to leave the potential tying runs on base.

The Tigers added another run in the sixth on a sacrifice fly to increase their lead to three at 6-3.

Farr and senior Barrett Rice led the Wildcat offense with two hits each, but K-State stranded eight runners on the day and left the bases loaded twice.

Saturday was more of the same for the suddenly struggling Wildcats.

Missouri broke a 5-5 tie in the fifth when three Wildcat errors led to four unearned runs and the eventual 9-5 Tiger victory, snapping the Wildcat's 16-game winning streak.

With one out, Hunter Mense lifted a fly ball to center where Link and Rice collided, and the ball fell to the turf. After a single, junior Eli Rumler mishandled a would-be double-play feed from sophomore Cris Tapia to allow the first run of the inning. The Tigers followed with a sacrifice fly to right and a single to take a 9-5 lead.

K-State starter senior Adam Cowart (4-1) lasted just 4.2 innings Saturday and gave up nine runs, four earned, on 11 hits. He struck out two and walked none. Missouri's Travis Wendte moved to 1-1 on the season after throwing 4.1 shutout innings of relief.

Freshman Ben Hornbeck relieved Cowart and threw the final 3.1 innings. He allowed no runs on four hits with four walks and two strikeouts.

Freshman Byron Wiley led the Wildcats with two hits and an RBI, while junior Eddie Vasquez was 2-for-3 and reached safely in all four at-bats. Roundy finished the day 0-for-5 to snap his 16-game hitting streak.

K-State returns home Tuesday to take on Chicago State for two games. The first pitch is set for 7 p.m.

BILL | Illegal immigrant law sparks House debate

Provisions of the law state these immigrants are required to sign an affidavit saying they have already applied to become a U.S. citizen or that they will apply as soon as they become eligible to do so.

Lewis said the immigrant status of these children should not affect their education.

"It is good educational policy for our state to ensure that we are educating as many of our high school graduates post-high school," Lewis said. "These are children that are working toward their U.S. citizenship, and we want them to become more educated citizens rather than less educated citizens when they get that citizenship."

The law was challenged once in 2005 but was thrown out because the judge said there was no case, Lewis said.

Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said he does not support the repeal and does not think immigrants' children should be punished because their parents immigrated illegally.

"Their parents are illegal, but it is not the sins of the children," Hawk said. "Why do we punish the children for what they didn't do? These young people are in a difficult position, and I think it is important that everyone has access to education because that is what makes our economy and democracy work."

Hawk said the law has economic benefits for Kansas.

"This law generates thousands of dollars worth of tuition the state likely would not have, because these students would not be able to attend a university without this tuition break," Hawk said.

Rep. Becky Hutchins, R-Holton, said she is a supporter of the repeal.

"The original law is in direct violation of federal law," Hutchins said. "We cannot give anything to illegal immigrants that we can not give to legal residents."

The original law also sets up immigrants for disappointment, Hutchins said.

"We give them this American dream, and then when they graduate they can not get a job because they are illegal," she said.

Hutchins said she does not think the repeal will pass this year, but may in the future.

"The plaintiffs have a strong case," she said.

Wefald celebrates 20 years at KSU

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

He said he's passionate about history and could spend hours roaming around museums when on business trips.

Books are his constant companions, and he said research is one of his many pastimes. He's written papers on everything from Negro League Baseball to World War II and Genghis Khan.

His wife refers to him as a kind of Renaissance man, interested in a plethora of topics.

He has stood beside many men of power, from Mikhail Gorbachev to the President of the United States.

Yet he stays.

He stays where he has been for the past 20 years. He said he stays because he loves it.

University President Jon Wefald said he has enjoyed every minute of his 20-year term at K-State and credits the success and longevity of his time to the quality of K-State staff and personnel.

"If you hire great people and then empower them, what you have is a momentum to keep getting better," he said. "It's just kind of magical. It took a long time, but what we finally got in place here is a team effort made up of staff, faculty and students."

Empowering those at K-State has been a big part of the picture, Wefald said, as well as encouraging ownership in the university to get work done and problems solved.

"We literally have hundreds of people making decisions here everyday," Wefald said. "Our idea is to get the job done. If there's a problem, we don't want to wait until next month or next week. We want to solve it today."

When he first came to K-State, Wefald said discussion with faculty, students, alumni and K-State supporters molded his vision for the university.

"You say to them, 'What do you think needs to be done?'" Wefald said. "You don't start off by saying, 'What do I want?' You say, 'What's the problem here? What needs to be done?'"

Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy, has worked as associate to Wefald since 1986.

When Wefald came to K-State, Reagan said he had some high hurdles to clear, namely a university suffering from low student population and a poor public image.

But Reagan said Wefald helped put K-State back on track.

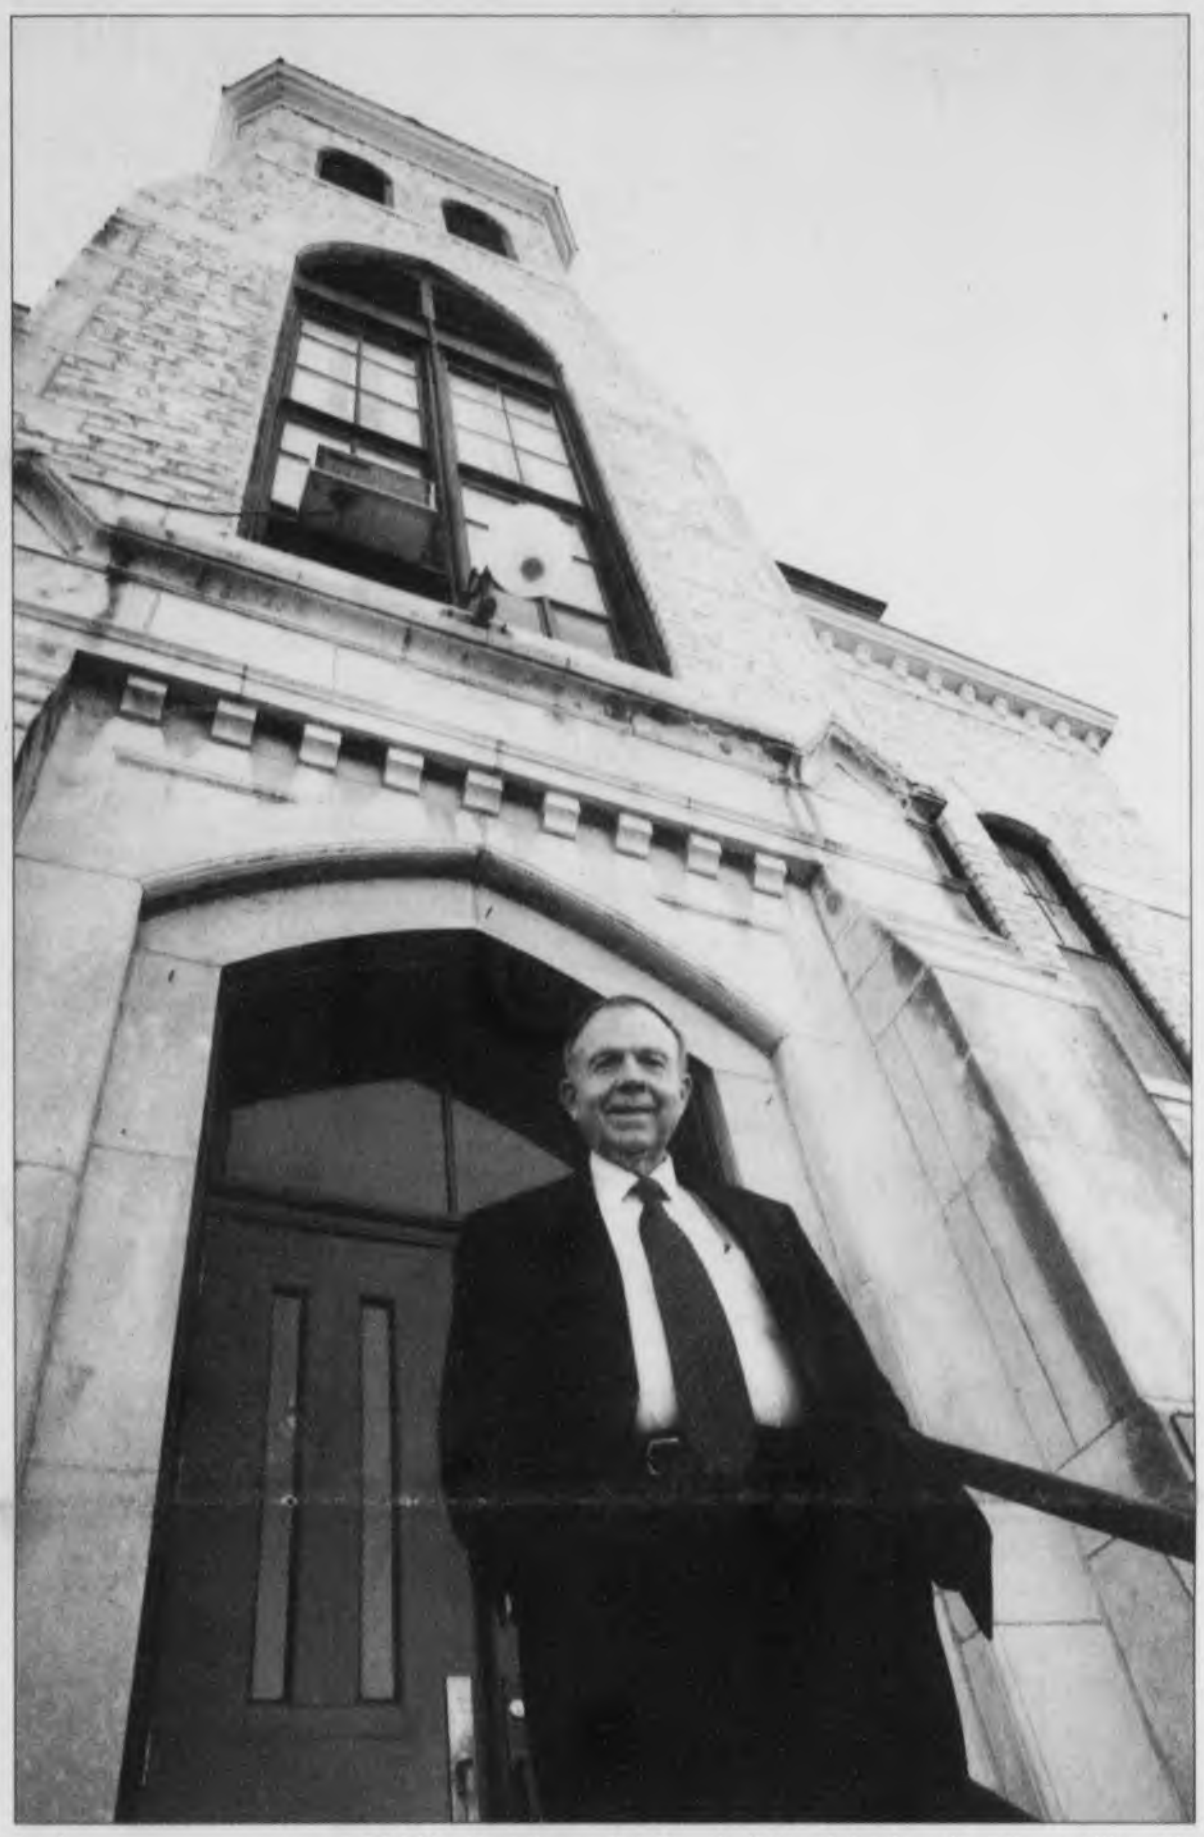
"Not only did he stop the slide of enrollment, but he built it back up," he said.

While at K-State, Wefald has seen enrollment increase from about 16,000 to 23,000 and an increase in private giving and total research funding.

"You put all that together, and that's a pretty remarkable record," Reagan said.

After two decades of striving to improve the university, Wefald reflected on what K-State might look like today if it would have continued on the path it was on when he came in the 1980s.

"Just think of K-State 2006 with 12,000 to 13,000 students, no marching band, no football program, no new library, no new art museum," he said. "In contrast to that, since 1986, we have two million square feet of new buildings, and that's all done in the declining atmosphere of declining federal and state funds. You look at things that people only dreamt about in 1986."



To experience success, Wefald said it's important to be in constant contact with students and faculty. He also said respecting everyone, being a good listener and having a good sense of humor are vital for every good leader.

While his work might be constant, Wefald said keeping these characteristics and a positive attitude make it possible to accomplish.

"To be president of a university in the Big 12 (Conference), it's seven days a week, 24 hours a day," Wefald said. "There is no rest but you have to enjoy it."

During Wefald's term, K-State has led the nation's public universities in total number of Rhodes, Marshall, Truman, Goldwater and Udall scholar-

New bill under fire again

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Debate on controversial new immigration legislation will begin today on the U.S. Senate floor.

The immigration bill, which focuses on border security, humanitarian aid to illegal immigrants and employment of immigrant workers, was first passed in December by the U.S. House of Representatives.

The bill passed by the House focused largely on the enforcement of current immigration policy. One new measure of the bill would fence off 700 miles of the U.S.-Mexican border. Crossing this border illegally would be a federal offense.

The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the bill on Monday, after several days of protests and demonstrations in California and Washington, D.C.

With protesters gathering outside the capitol building, the committee added

Webmail improved for faster service

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The information technology staff was busy updating campus technology during spring break, Rebecca Gould, director of Information Technology Assistant Center, said. The staff worked to improve e-mail and update several technology classrooms.

"Hopefully people will see a significant increase in speed of e-mail," said Elizabeth Unger, vice provost and dean of academic services and technology.

Unger said a team of staff members worked to upgrade and uncluster servers and improve spam filters for WebMail.

"They have been able to identify 50 percent more spam and now about 30 percent of spam is being caught," Gould said.

If people are still getting a lot of spam, they can increase the sensitivity preference on their eProfile for WebMail, Gould said. She added that students should still check their spam folders often to make sure there aren't any false positives.

Kyle Gach, junior in mechanical engineering, said he usually checks his e-mail daily and said he has noticed that his e-mail is faster.

"It was really slow before," he said. "It seems to have more speed than it did."

Also, Computing and Network Services cleaned technology classrooms and installed 17 visual presenters, or Elmos, that can allow for projection of two and three-dimensional objects and did software updates on all computers in the 36 technology classrooms across campus.

Allen mulls transfer; Huggins meets team

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Since the end of the men's basketball season, sophomore guard Curtis Allen said he has thought about transferring.

"It's 50-50," Allen said Monday, when asked if he intends to return. "Right now, it's up in the air. I'm not sure."

Allen, who played in 22 games and averaged 7.3 minutes per game this past season, said he was disappointed with his playing time.

Though Allen said he would prefer to stay, he is not sure if K-State is the best fit to finish his college basketball career.

But before making a final decision, Allen said he wants to meet individually with coach Bob Huggins, who was named Jim Wooldridge's replacement last Thursday.

"(Huggins) recruits guys kind of like me," Allen said. "I'm very athletic and have quickness and speed. That is one of the reasons why I'd like to stay here."

Though Allen said the thought of playing closer to his Long Beach, Calif., home intrigues him, Huggins may be able to persuade Allen to stay when the two meet next Wednesday or Thursday.

What can Huggins say to convince Allen to remain a Wildcat?

"Not really promise me playing time, but just make me feel like he's not going to over-recruit my same spot," Allen said. "Like a father-figure, I want to be someone that he cares about."

Huggins spoke with Allen and the rest of the Wildcats in a team meeting that lasted for more than an hour Monday afternoon at Bramlage Coliseum. It was Huggins' first opportunity to meet his new team.

Sophomore guard David Hoskins, from Canton, Mich., grew up watching Huggins' Cincinnati teams on TV.

"Actually, when I was in high school, (Cincinnati) was one of my favorite schools," Hoskins said.

Hoskins said he learned of Huggins' hiring when a friend woke him up by calling at 3 a.m. Thursday.

"I was surprised," Hoskins said of Huggins' decision to come to K-State. "He is a highly talked-about coach, so you wouldn't expect him to come, but he's here. And he's talking about doing good things and big things."

Huggins, who most recently coached 16 seasons at Cincinnati before being forced to resign last August, said he doesn't know a lot about his team.

"I watched some tape, but I don't know very much," Huggins said. "I don't know anything until I get out there with them and see what they can do, and try to accentuate what they do well."

From what little film Huggins has seen, he said K-State's primary need is obvious.

"Lack of size," Huggins said. "It's nice to have somebody that can change shots and make up for some defensive lapses."

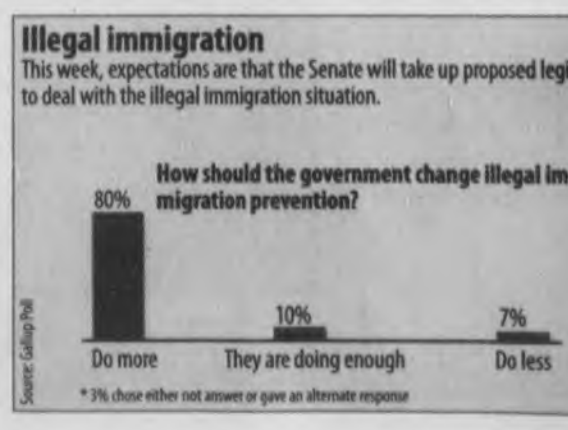
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Moussaoui trial

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Zacarias Moussaoui, al-Qaeda conspirator, testified Monday that he and would-be shoe bomber Richard Reid were supposed to hijack a fifth airplane and fly it into the White House as part of the Sept. 11 attacks. This contradicted his previous statements in which he said the White House attack was happen if the United States refused to release a Egyptian sheik imprisoned on terrorist convictions.

Immigration bill dipped



WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senators broke Monday from the House's get-tough approach by refusing to make criminals of people who help illegal immigrants. The Senate Judiciary Committee adopted an amendment by Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., that would protect church and charitable groups, as well as individuals, from criminal prosecution for providing food, shelter, medical care and counseling to undocumented immigrants.

Shiites mad over U.S. raid

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Shiite politicians raged at the United States and halted negotiations on a new government Monday after a military assault killed at least 16 people in what Iraqis claim was a mosque. The firestorm of recrimination over Sunday's raid in northeast Baghdad will likely make it harder for Shiite politicians to keep a lid on their more angry followers as sectarian violence boils over, with at least 142 dead since Sunday.

Illegal immigration

This week, expectations are that the Senate will take up proposed legislation to deal with the illegal immigration situation.

Reality bites: Facebook to begin deleting fake profiles

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. – As Facebook becomes ever more popular, users can no longer enjoy the humor of being poked by a panda or a monkey. With more college (and now high school) students creating profiles on Facebook, other students have opted to take the more creative route of making fake profiles.

However, Facebook has answered back and has decided to deactivate all fake profiles until the users change back to their actual identities.

Indiana University sophomore Jon Palak created a fake profile under the name 'a panda,' but Facebook recently deactivated it.

"(Facebook) sent me an e-mail saying that I have to change my name, which I was able to change to Jon 'a Panda' Palak," Palak said. "But then I deactivated that because it didn't have the same ring as 'a panda.'"

However, it is against Facebook's policy to create fake profiles.

"The intent of Facebook is to enable the communication of real information between real users," said a Facebook customer-service representative.

While the Web site is cracking down on profiles, Facebook is also trying to get rid of inappropriate groups as well.

"After we lost to Indiana State in basketball, I started a Facebook group with a few curse words in it," freshman Noah Skube said. "After a month, they notified me and told me that they were taking that down."

DUKE MEN'S LACROSSE TEAM FACES RAPE ALLEGATIONS

DURHAM, N.C. – In the wake of allegations that members of the Duke University's men's lacrosse team gang-raped, sodomized and strangled a dancer at a March 13 party, Duke is facing community outrage and national media attention.

Forty-six of 47 teammates were DNA-tested by police Thursday. President Richard Brodhead said in a statement that not all of the 46 members who were tested attended the party.

Some community members are calling the situation "the perfect storm" – a heated convergence of issues related to race, class and town-gown relations.

The alleged victim is a black exotic dancer who is enrolled in classes at North Carolina Central University; she told police that her attackers are white.

Officials are investigating the reported incident as first-degree forcible rape, common law robbery, first-degree kidnapping, first-degree sexual offense and felonious strangulation.

No charges had been filed as of Sunday night, a Durham Police Department spokesperson said.

The players, however, have denied the accusations, Athletics Director Joe Alleva said.

By Megan Moser

Melissa Bigham, junior in feed science and management, tears down a wall in a home damaged by Hurricane Katrina. Bigham and 42 other students went to New Orleans as a part of the Alternative Spring Break sponsored by Leadership Studies and Programs and the Community Service Program.

Fuzzy black mold covers every surface. An overwhelming, musty stench hangs in the air. Overhead, the ceiling sags and the discolored carpet squishes underfoot. Clothes and papers are stuck to the floor in stiff clumps, and when picked up, huge cockroaches run out.

Forty-three students from K-State encountered that scene when they traveled to New Orleans to clean up after Hurricane Katrina during spring break, March 18-25. The group went as a part of Alternative Spring Break, co-sponsored by Leadership Studies and Programs and the Community Service Program.

Equipped with masks and gloves, they spent time gutting five houses, picking up garbage and talking to flood victims.

"When you first walk into the house, it's pretty much disgusting," Chris Nolda, junior in finance, said. "It smells really bad. Everything is kind of wet. We removed all the clothing and furniture and everything. Then we started removing damaged walls and floors – and as that went on, it started to smell better."

Suzanne Mayo-Theus, graduate teaching assistant in leadership studies and trip sponsor, is a native of Louisiana and has helped plan 18 trips to the Gulf Coast so far.

"My goal was that K-State students would have the experience of seeing New Orleans and that they would grow from that experience," she said. "I wanted them to see the devastation and develop some empathy."

Kyle Spencer, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said the degree of damage in the city surprised him.

"Driving into the city at night, all I could see were a few FEMA trailers, and I thought, 'Oh, it's not so bad.' But as the sun came up over the city, and we could see all the destruction, it kind of opened my eyes."

The group worked with Mack Slan, founder of Eastern New Orleans United and Whole, which disperses information on government assistance to displaced New Orleans residents. Slan volunteered his time and the tools from his construction company so the students could clear houses for people who couldn't afford to have it done professionally.

"I figured if these kids had the time to come all the way down here and give their time, the least I could do is give my time," Slan said. "You just have to set examples and hope people follow suit."

Pat Agwu, graduate student in computer science, said the New Orleans residents he encountered were appreciative of their efforts.

"All the people were so thankful that it was all worth it," he said.

Many students said their tour of the Lower Ninth Ward, an area of the city hit especially hard by the flood, was the most moving part of the trip. There, many houses had been lifted off of their foundations, pushed on their sides, or even moved on top of cars by the flood waters.

"It was pretty devastating down there," Agwu said. "It seemed like the hurricane happened yesterday. The cadaver dogs haven't even been down to a lot of those areas to search for bodies. It made me realize that this is far from being over."

Spencer agreed. "The whole trip, we had been seeing the flood lines on all the houses, but in the Lower Ninth, there was no water line because the water had been over the roofs. There was just this eerie silence from the moment we stopped there. The only noise was the wind blowing."

Other students appreciated talking to the owners of the houses they were working on.

"For me, one of the most memorable times was when a man whose house we were working on, Jerome, came to meet us," said Katie Anderson, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education. "We salvaged two or three of his pictures. Just to see how those few things made his day, it kept me going. It made me forget that my legs were sore."

Ira Rodney, graduate student in geology, had a personal connection to the trip. A native of New Orleans, Rodney came to K-State after the hurricane.

"I wanted to go back to see what had been done since the last time I was there and to give a helping hand to the residents who couldn't help themselves," he said. "It looks like a lot of trash and debris has been moved from there, and a lot of telephone poles and glass."

Rodney said he left the city with his parents and sister before the flood, but his two brothers stayed behind. They waited on rooftops and stayed in the Superdome for several days before they were able to evacuate New Orleans.

"We tried to persuade them to get on out, but they're grown men, so they had to decide for themselves," he said. "Usually when a hurricane comes, we get some rain and some wind, but usually that's about it, nothing to this magnitude. This one kind of caught us."

Some of the students also spent part of their week working in the office of Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La. They said they felt the government response has not been sufficient.

"I think there has been a large shortcoming on the part of the government, said Angela Nichols, staff assistant for Leadership Studies and Programs and trip co-coordinator. "But I think now it's our time as students, as young people, as Americans to step up and make a change."

The city is preparing for mayoral elections on April 22. With 23 candidates and a large portion of the constituency displaced, the elections themselves are controversial.

"The government has been lethargic in their response to people," Letitia Tajuba, junior in political science, said. "The disenfranchisement was very prevalent. These people don't know how to access basic information on how to vote."

However, Spencer said he wasn't sure the government was at fault.

"It seems extreme that after seven months that nothing has been touched," Spencer said. "I don't know if it's the culture or just the scale of the disaster. I don't necessarily blame it on the government. It just seems like there has been a loss of hope and no one has spurred any action."

All the students said they learned from their experiences on the trip.

"It changed my outlook on everything," Agwu said. "Seeing is believing. You can see it on TV, but seeing it firsthand is different than seeing how the media portrays it."

Nichols said she learned why many didn't tear down their homes and start over.

"There is such a rich history and culture in New Orleans," Nichols said. "That's why it's so important to rebuild and restore versus bulldozing everything and rebuilding from scratch. It's a place that really needs to be preserved."

The group is planning trips in April to help with elections and in May for more cleanup work. They said it will take years before all the damage has been repaired.

"I just hope more people continue to go because everyone can help in some way," Tajuba said. "That's what I really took away from this experience."

TO THE POINT

Students should utilize new SGA Web site

The Student Affairs and Social Services Committee, which is part of Student Governing Association, has developed a Web link for students to voice their opinions and suggestions for K-State.

In order to make students more aware of the link, the committee will promote it today and Wednesday with free cans of Pepsi, a banner and posters.

Students sometimes complain about not knowing what is going on in SGA or other aspects of campus. The new link will allow students to voice their concerns.

SGA will forward the comments and suggestions to the appropriate committee, and its members will try their best to follow up the suggestions with results.

The link also allows students to provide positive feedback on SGA and campus events.

Students should take advantage of the new link since it is on the Internet, which is a resource to which most college students have access.

The form is electronic, easily to follow and convenient.

If students take five minutes to voice their concerns to SGA on the new link, the end result could benefit the entire student body and university.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Shake on it?

Guidelines needed for introductions, greetings

JACI BOYDSTON

As college students, most of us are at least mildly interested in advancing our professional lives and possibly even – gasp – getting a real, grown-up job someday.

In preparation for that huge step into adulthood, we take classes, polish résumés and perhaps even participate in a mock interview or two.

Despite all these efforts and my rapidly approaching graduation date, I still feel sorely unprepared for the "real world" in at least one important way.

I don't know how to shake hands.

Allow me to clarify. Although I am capable of grasping another person's right hand with my right hand and shaking it up and down a few times, it's a social institution that makes me uncomfortable.

I originally planned to advocate the creation of a mandatory hand-shaking class to teach students like me how and when to perform this unnecessary ritual. However after thinking about it, I don't think the problem is limited to students, young people or even socially awkward people like me.

There is a lack of national guidelines dictating how and when people should shake hands, and there should be some clarification, preferably in the form of federal legislation, because several hand-shaking issues need to be cleared up.

Under what circumstances is a handshake necessary?

Certainly you would shake hands with a potential employer during a job interview, but there are oodles of less-clear situations.

If your roommate introduces you to a new girlfriend or boyfriend, would a handshake be necessary or out of place? What about the first time you meet your academic adviser? And what happens when you're at a restaurant and run into a professional colleague you've only met a few times?

Other issues that national guidelines would clear up are the actual logistics of handshaking. Every time I shake a hand, I'm inevitably concerned with how firm my grip is relative to the other person's. In the same breath, how many shakes up and down is appropriate?

Two seems to do the job just fine, but I've met people who hit five and keep going.

And even worse, what happens when you're sitting down and someone extends a hand to shake yours? Is it necessary to stand up?

Another nice thing about formal handshake legislation is that certain things would be outlawed. For example, there should be penalties for grabbing someone's elbow during a shake or continuing to hold hands awkwardly after finishing the shaking motion.

If we instituted handshake legislation, all of these gray areas could be resolved. Personally, I'm in favor of completely abolishing all introductory handshakes, although I would welcome any kind of uniform guidelines.

Best of all, if we do abolish handshakes, we could come up with some other greeting ritual to replace them. I briefly considered the idea of nice-to-meet-you high-fives, but many similar problems could arise (relative heights of the high-fiving parties, the acceptability of low-fives, etc.).

In the end, we need a greeting that doesn't include germ-spreading physical contact or an assessment of which person has the stronger grip. A brief, acknowledging bow of the head would do just fine – it's simple, it doesn't spread disease and people who are missing limbs can do it too.

So write your congressman. Maybe by your first job interview, you'll be bowing heads to your potential employer instead of suffering through another awkward handshake.

Ideological differences should be embraced

JONAS HOGG

One of my last actions before fleeing for spring break was watching "Flock of Dodos," a documentary about the evolution vs. intelligent design debate in Kansas.

To an outsider this seems to be a contest between new science-worship and old religion, and as with any religious conflict, includes name-calling and face-making.

Such discussions are of interest, an activity the intelligent enjoy: questioning where man is from, where he is going and where he is. It is the realm of the half-witted to be offended by opposing philosophies.

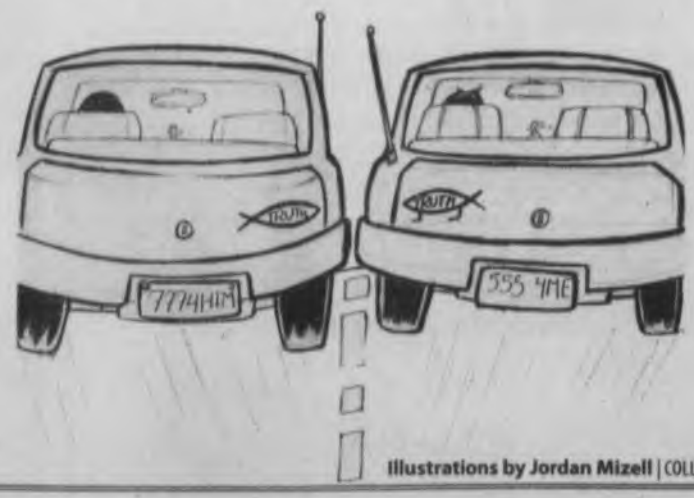
But the question remains: what should we teach? To which the simple answer is: should not we teach everything that affects our world, even if unpopular?

If millions of people believe man descended from apes, is this not something students should be taught?

Likewise, if millions believe that Prophet Muhammad was the chosen of Allah, and Jesus Christ was the son of God, are not these important aspects of humanity that deserve airing and discussion?

The argument is that the mere presence of religion in the classroom serves as endorsement, which is thick idiocy.

The merit of education is lost unless education is broad. For one reason or another we have moved away from this, forgoing lines of history and reasoning.



It seems apparent that evolution, with both its merits and flaws should be taught, as well as creationism and all that lies between. Both of these are important ideas that have shaped the world. The mere mention of the fact that Christians believe the world was created in six days will not likely cause the science department to crumble into dust.

But, the purveyors of science as a religion are as disdainful of opposing viewpoints as, say, the 16th-century Catholic Church. Asking questions unanswerable by nu-science and one becomes a savage, a dolt, a religious fanatic, a heretic, an unbeliever.

So we find ourselves entrenched in stupidity over a lesson plan that looks something like this:

- There exists a theory of evolution that states man evolved, independently, from single-celled life over billions of years. This theory is supported by fossil records and genetic similarity between species, but is hampered by an inability to prove that chance formation of life is possible or to even guess as to the conditions under which it could occur.
- A theory exists of intelligent design that states man evolved with the assistance of a higher power over billions of years. This theory is supported by a complexity of some organisms that hampers the idea of chance occurrence, but is hampered by an inability to name what intelligence was culpable in the design.
- There exists a theory of creationism that states the universe is much younger and man was created by a higher power. This theory is supported by fluctuations in the speed of light but is hindered by the fossil record and is faith-based.
- There exist many other theories of creation. Further reading and thought is encouraged.

As of the last reading civilization has not collapsed, Willard Hall is still standing, and only those looking for something to offend them have become offended.

Drew Thompson, senior in mechanical engineering, irons monokote paper to the wing for an aircraft. The K-State Aero Design Team is making the aircraft.

Aero team makes plane

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Society of Automotive Engineers' Aero Design Team has been up to a lot recently.

The team is creating an aircraft made of balsa wood and carbon fiber for two competitions – one in Marietta, Ga., from April 21-23 and one in Encino, Calif., from June 1-3.

"The goal is to create a plane that can lift the maximum amount of payload," Nelson Pratt, SAE president and senior in mechanical engineering, said. "We are shooting for about 28 pounds of payload on a 10-pound airplane."

About 50 schools will attend each competition, including colleges and universities in the United States as well as from Europe and South America. The competitions have guidelines on the type of aircraft and the requirements for movement that each needs to complete.

"During the competition, the aircraft must take off within a 200-foot take-off zone, fly in a complete circle around the runway, then land within a 400-foot landing zone," Drew Thompson, team leader and senior in mechanical engineering, said. "Points are awarded to the team based on the amount of weight that the aircraft can fly with. In addition, the team receives points for creating a design report that explains all of the conclusions that the team came to when designing the aircraft, and why all decisions were made."

Working up to the competition, teams test their aircraft to determine its maximum weight capacity and flight patterns.

"We started building this year's airplane in the fall of 2005," Michael Rice, junior in mechanical engineering, said. "Recently we have used the wind tunnel to test wing designs and are in the process of finishing one plane and building a second plane as a backup."

Although the project is a lot of work, most of the team members said they enjoy it.

"We put in a lot of time on weeknights and weekends to make this project happen," Pratt said.

House overrides firearm veto

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas House of Representatives voted Thursday to override a veto of Senate Bill 418 by Gov. Kathleen Sebelius, a measure that would allow Kansans to carry concealed firearms.

The actions by the Legislature make Sebelius the first governor in 12 years to have a veto overridden.

Similar legislative pieces have arisen before, most recently in 2004 when Sebelius vetoed the proposed concealed carry law, a veto that was upheld in the Kansas Legislature.

The bill's success stems partly from its bipartisan support, said John Carlin, visiting professor of political science.

Since the 2004 veto, the political landscape surrounding concealed carry has changed, and change has brought democrats, the governor's own party members, into conflict with Kansas' head of state, Carlin said.

"It has gradually picked up supporters," he said. "The fact that one of the key proponents was a democrat helped."

That proponent was Rep. L. Candy Ruff, D-Leavenworth, who has been called the chief champion of the measure.

Having a democrat at the helm of the measure may have caused a party split and allowed supporters of the bill to gain the necessary votes for the override, Carlin said.

Joseph Aistrup, head of the political science department, said attrition of opponents of concealed carry eroded the already marginal ability to sustain vetoes.

"Chances are whenever you're talking about a governor's veto being overridden it's never a positive thing," Aistrup said.

But the amount of damage has yet to be seen.

Aistrup said while Sebelius will be unpopular among supporters of concealed carry, it is a voting segment she has, thus-far, done well without. Manhattan democratic representatives Tom Hawk and Sydney Carlin both supported the governor's veto and do not think the issue will be pressing in the November election.

"It will not be a major factor in her reelection at all," Sydney Carlin said. "People will move on."

As for Sebelius, a statement released by her press secretary, Nicole Corcoran, said the governor was looking forward to moving on to different issues.

"She did what she felt was right and the legislature did what they felt was right," she said. "There's nothing more to it than that as far as we're concerned."

SGA Web site promotion begins today

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Student Affairs and Social Services Committee will promote its Hey SGA Web site today and Wednesday.

Members of the committee will hand out Pepsi cans labeled with the Web site link in the Quad and in front of the K-State Student Union.

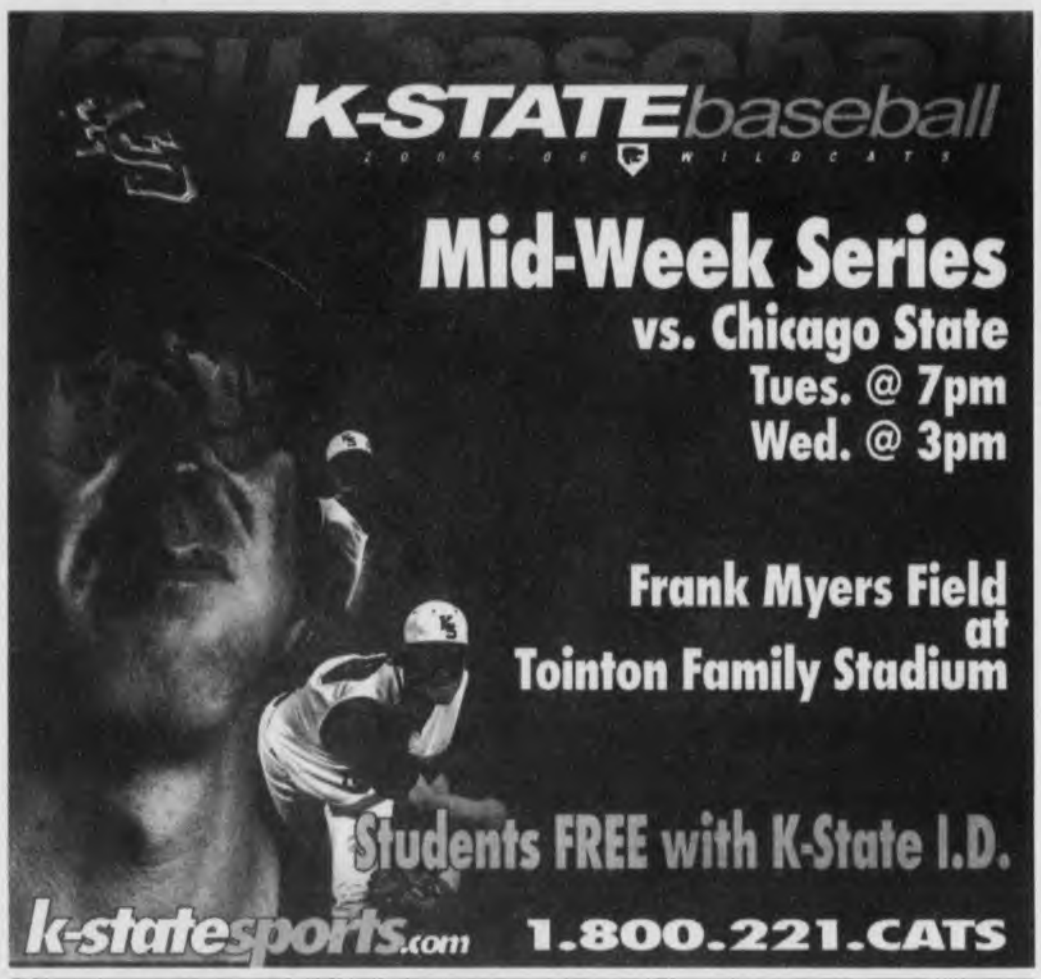
Bill Harlan, assistant coordinator with Office of Student Activities, said when students submit comments on the Web site, there are two ways the information can be dispersed.

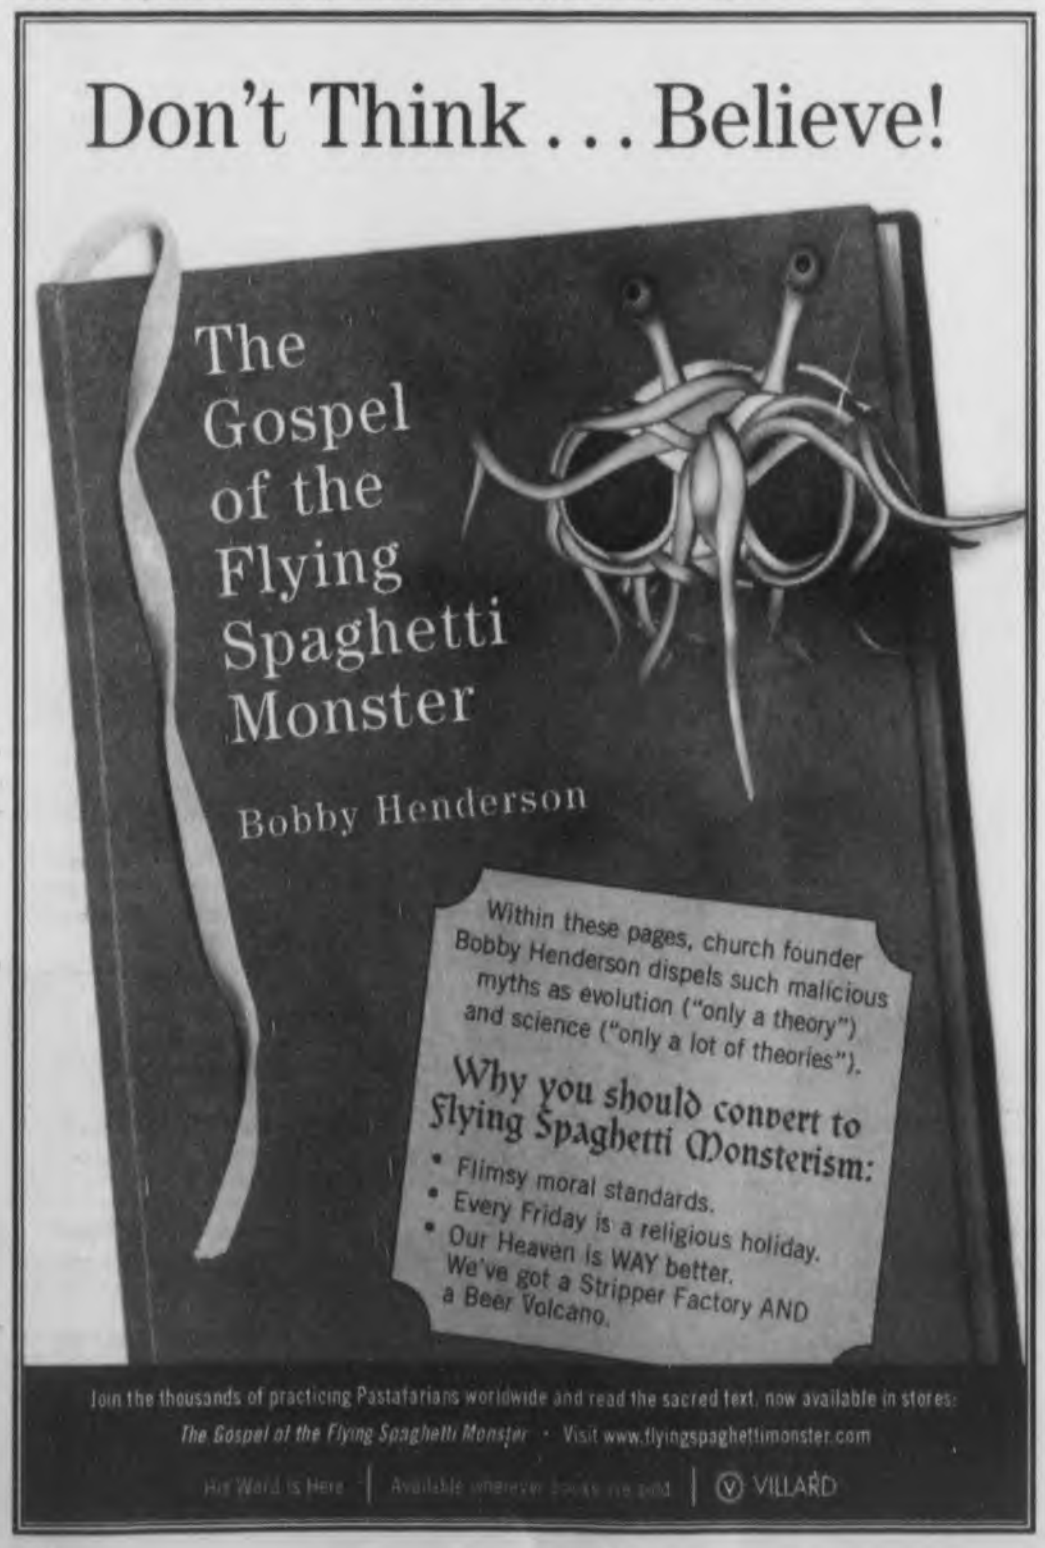
If a student sends the information to a specific committee, Harlan said it will forward the comment to that committee's chair. The other option is for the comment to be sent by default to the student body president and student senate chair.

In addition to the Pepsi cans, there will also be a banner promoting the Web site around Holtz Hall. The committee will also post signs around campus and in the residence halls about the Web site, Mosimann said.



"The goal is to get students' attention and provide a vehicle for students and what they are thinking," said Jim Mosimann, Student Affairs and Social Services chair and junior in political science. "We can then take the ideas and talk about them in applicable committees."

College of Business Administration Senator Amanda Thompson said she will help distribute Pepsi cans.



"I think it's a great way to let SGA know what the students are thinking and where they want K-State to go in the future and what changes should be made," Thompson, junior in accounting, said.

Bill Muir, who has served as Senate faculty representative for 13 years, said SGA has used town hall meetings, forums and Web sites in the past to reach the student body.

"I think that there's been an effort by every Student Senate administration to reach out," Muir said. "This one is another step in that direction to bring people out and have them talk about what their needs, wants and dreams and for SGA to listen."

Fans help women in hosting tourney

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

As most die-hard, purple clad, Willie-the-Wildcat-loving K-State fans know, the women's basketball team is in the Final Four – of the Women's National Invitation Tournament, which is the first Final Four ever for women's basketball in the WNIT or NCAA Tournament while competing in the Big 12 Conference.

However, it is likely that before the women began playing in the tournament, many never knew the WNIT existed. But once the word went out that the K-State women did have a postseason and that the games would be played in the friendly confines of Bramlage Coliseum, the Wildcat faithful showed up.

"I can't even tell you how excited we are to be playing in the final four of the WNIT at home," coach Deb Patterson said. "Our fan base has been phenomenal and that, in large part, is why we're here. I think our fans have come and made a statement to the tournament as a whole that we're following this women's team. We're going to help them win a championship."

WNIT games are played at one of the opposing two team's home courts instead of at a neutral site as in the NCAA tournament.

"I don't know that at any time during the season our fans have been as invested or as loud and as raucous as they've been during this WNIT tournament," Patterson said. "It has been fabulous. If there is 5,000 in there, it sounds like 9,000. If there is 7,000 or 6,000 in there, it sounds like 8,000 or 9,000. It's really been special."

K-State has had the luxury of playing each of their four previous games during the tournament at home. Junior Twiggy McIntyre said the home-court advantage offers a boost to the team.

"It's tremendous," McIntyre said. "I think we play our best basketball at home in the comfort of our friends and family. I love it, I love being here and I'm just honored to get to play at least one more game this season.

"Playing in the NCAA tournament would have been great. That's a tremendous honor, but we're playing and we're practicing just as if we were in the NCAA because the NIT is just as prestigious a type of tournament and we're honored to be in the final four."

Junior Claire Coggins, who is averaging 21 points per game during the WNIT, said the team is proud to play in the tournament.

"Obviously, for the older girls, we wanted the NCAA really bad, but we're in the final four," Coggins said. "We're the only Big 12 team still playing, and we're really proud of that.

"It's awesome to be able to play in Bramlage, and our administration was really, really helpful in getting us this host site. It's good for our team too. It's really cool to be able to stay at home."

Cats set for matchup with Toppers

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After four months of clawing and scratching its way through its 2005-06 schedule, the K-State women's basketball team is the last Big 12 Conference team left playing as it takes on Western Kentucky at 7 tonight in the semifinals of the Women's National Invitation Tournament.

"I know a lot of people underestimated this team, but we've always believed in ourselves and our abilities," freshman Shalee Lehning said. "This team is special and we are proving that to the nation now."

The Wildcats (22-10) advanced to the WNIT Final Four with a 77-63 win against Nebraska on Friday, while the Lady Toppers (27-6) advanced with a 94-81 win at Villanova on Thursday.

Tonight's game marks the fourth-consecutive home game for K-State in the WNIT and junior Claire Coggins said she couldn't be happier to be playing at Bramlage Coliseum.

"Our fans are amazing and the fact that we have the opportunity to play post season at home is awesome and the fact that we have so much support, it really makes us proud," said Coggins, who is averaging 21 points per game in the WNIT.

Like K-State, Western Kentucky will play in its first-ever WNIT Final Four game and is led by sophomore Crystal Kelly and junior Tiffany Zaragoza. Kelly is averaging 25 points per game, while Zaragoza is averaging 14.6 points and 5.3 assists per game in the tournament.

The Lady Toppers are averaging 86 points per game in the WNIT and coach Deb Patterson said the Wildcats will have to be prepared for WKU's fast-paced offense.

"They've got two incredibly, effective players," Patterson said. "One kid can shoot the three and Kelly is a post-presence inside. We are going to have to have a great defensive gameplan against this basketball team."

Lehning, who is averaging 10.3 rebounds per game and 7.6 assists per game in the tournament, said Western Kentucky is a very athletic team.

"We are just going to come in and really focus on our game," said Lehning, who became K-State's single season assist record-holder against Nebraska. "We can't have spells of the game where we lose focus and not get our job done."

Patterson said the second-ever meeting between K-State and Western Kentucky will be a fight.

"It's just going to come down to, possession by possession, who is going to battle, who is going to play the smartest and who is the most physical," Patterson said.

The winner of tonight's game will play Marquette in the championship game of the WNIT later this week.

Miracle moment

Senior moves on with life after losing father to cancer

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

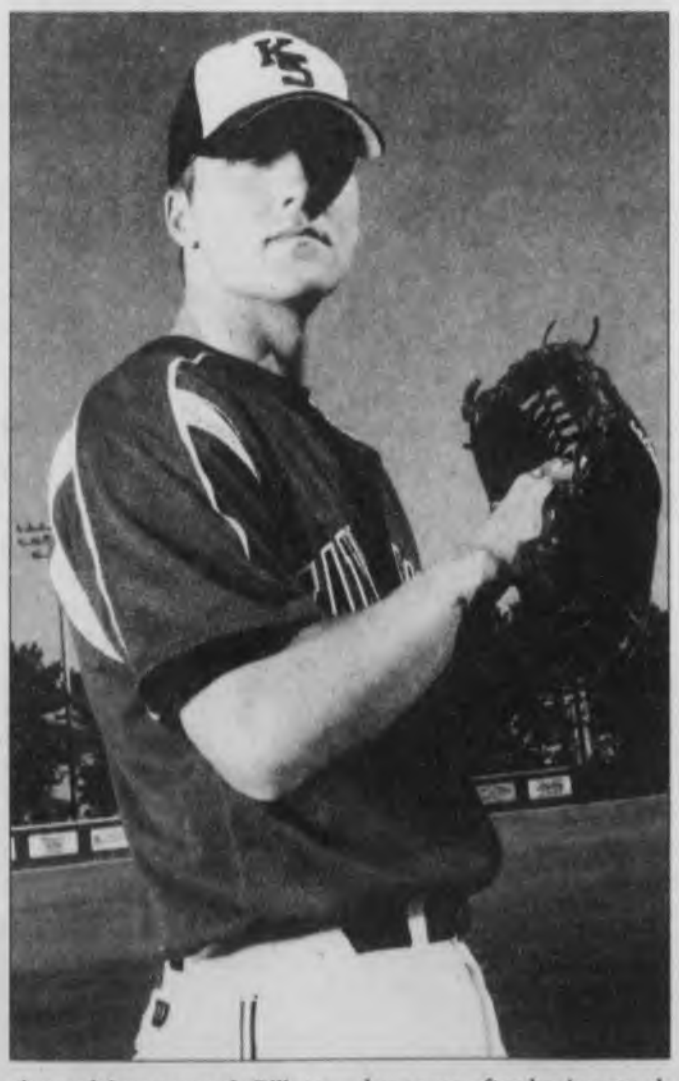
A miracle is defined as an extraordinary occurrence that is ascribed to a divine or supernatural cause. Some people wait their entire lives to witness one and others don't believe they exist. But for senior relief pitcher B.J. Kissel, his miracle came in the form of an early morning phone call from the hospital in November 2004.

Earlier that semester, Kissel transferred to K-State after winning an NCAA Division II National Championship at Central Missouri State with current Wildcat coach Brad Hill. Kissel had also recently learned his father, Bill, had cancer.

"He got diagnosed in August, right when I got up here to school," said Kissel, who has appeared in four games this season for the Wildcats.

Bill had been diagnosed with sarcoma in his left leg. A sarcoma is a cancer of connective or support tissue that can include bone, cartilage, fat, muscle and blood vessels.

For the next few months, Kissel went home – when he could – to Stillwell, Kan., to visit and help his mother, Nancy.



"I didn't get the chance to go home very much," Kissel, senior in mass communications, said. "My mom told me not to come home.

"A lot of it was that my dad had lost a lot of weight and she was trying to keep me from that as long as she could. I was up here (in Manhattan) doing all my baseball stuff, and she told me that she wanted me up here, and if she ever needed any help she would let me know."

Bill, who B.J. credits as being the most influential person in his game and life, then began radiation treatment. His doctors hoped the radiation would shrink the sarcoma and so they could attack the cancer with just a small amount of chemotherapy. Although the radiation treatments appeared to work at first, Nancy said it was soon apparent that the radiation was not working and Bill would begin chemotherapy.

While in Manhattan, B.J. said doctors thought they had found an excessive amount of calcium in Bill's brain in between stopping the radiation treatment and starting the chemo treatment, and the cancer could spread to his brain.

Nancy said the excessive calcium caused Bill to become disoriented and he had trouble speaking. Nancy took Bill back to the hospital to start the chemotherapy as soon as possible.

Bill slipped into a three-day coma after having an allergic reaction to the chemo.

B.J., again, made his way back to Stillwell to join Nancy and his sister, Jennifer, to

The 2006 edition of March Madness has been one of the best I've ever experienced.

MATTHEW GIRARD

It's been college basketball at it's best. It's on everybody's minds and most of the college basketball-loving fans are united for an entire month.

This year's March Madness is one I will base all the others on. From destroyed brackets to different forms of "Shockers," here are the top reasons why March Madness '06 is up there with the greats.

- No No. 1 seeds in the Men's NCAA Tournament made it to the Final Four.
- Sophomore Glen Davis of Louisiana State has become the darling of the tournament. The 6-foot-9, 310-pound Davis has wowed people with his abilities and I've heard talk of fans wearing diapers.
- The Wichita State Shockers defeated No. 2-seed Tennessee 80-73 to advance to the Sweet 16 before losing to Final Four-bound George Mason, 63-55. The cheerleaders also showed off the school's unofficial hand gesture.
- No. 11-seed George Mason took out No. 3-seed North Carolina and No. 1-seed Connecticut to advance to the Final Four for the first time.
- I know my bracket was done after the first round.
- Duke's J.J. Redick and Gonzaga's Adam Morrison broke down into tears after losing to LSU and UCLA, respectively. They both left their all on the floor. I felt bad for Morrison, but not so much for Redick.
- K-State's women's basketball team made it to the Final Four of the Women's National Invitation Tournament and the fans have shown why this is one of the best basketball atmospheres in the country.

The K-State men's basketball team also made a splash in the March Madness pool with the hiring of former Cincinnati coach Bob Huggins.

Even people in Cincinnati are wearing purple.

- As I've said before in columns, my wife is not a big sports fan, but even she is caught up in the hoopla. After almost every game, Jennifer initiates the basketball conversations, asking "did you see that game?"

Trust me, this means the 2006 installation of March Madness is huge.

I hope your 2006 March Madness has been just as memorable.

1-MINUTE DRILL

Staff Reports

NFL | Season opener has Miami versus Pittsburgh

ORLANDO, Fla. — A Thursday night season opener featuring Miami at Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh, and a Thanksgiving night game at Kansas City highlight a portion of the NFL scheduled announced Monday.

Manning

The league's new tradition of opening on a Thursday night moves to NBC, which has taken over one of the prime-time television packages. The Dolphins, who finished 9-7 last season, will play at the Steelers on Sept. 7 at 8:30 p.m. EST.

NBC's first Sunday night matchup will be a brotherly quarterback feud between the Mannings as Peyton brings his Indianapolis Colts to the Meadowlands to play Eli and the Giants at 8:15 p.m. EST.

NFL | Tagliabue successor not yet known

ORLANDO, Fla. — The search for Paul Tagliabue's successor may take awhile.

As the NFL meetings started Monday, Tagliabue postponed appointing a committee to begin a search for the next commissioner and was vague on when he might do it.

One reason for the delay is trying to avoid what happened in 1989, when outgoing commissioner Pete Rozelle appointed a committee of insiders. That alienated outsiders, leading to a seven-month deadlock.

BKC | Redick, Morrison unanimous All-Americans

J.J. Redick of Duke and Adam Morrison of Gonzaga spent all season locked in a bicoastal scoring race. Fittingly, they ended it as the only unanimous selections for The Associated Press' All-America men's basketball team.

Morrison

Redick, the most prolific three-point scorer in college history, was a repeat choice. He and Morrison were joined on the first team Monday by Redick's teammate Shelden Williams, Randy Foye of Villanova and Brandon Roy, Washington's first All-American in 53 years.

Morrison, the only junior on an otherwise all-senior first team, won the scoring title with a 28.4 average, just ahead of Redick's 27.4. Morrison shot 43.7 percent from 3-point range, while Redick hit 42.1 percent from beyond the arc.

BKC | Sharapova advances in Nasdaq-100 Open

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. — Maria Sharapova overcame a slow start and eight double faults Monday, earning a berth in the quarterfinals of the Nasdaq-100 Open by beating fellow Russian Maria Kirilenko 3-6, 6-4, 6-1.

Sharapova committed 43 unforced errors, but only five were in the final set against Kirilenko.

NFL | Cowboys receiver signs contract extension

Glenn

Glenn's new contract, which runs through 2010 and replaces a previous contract that had one year remaining, comes just more than a week after Terrell Owens signed a three-year, $25 million deal with the Cowboys.

In the wake of Owens' deal, Glenn suggested last week he might seek to have his own deal upgraded. At the same time, Glenn said his contract would not be an issue and emphasized he would not skip offseason workouts or training camp.

Big Dreams

Student, Junction City native hopes to hit it big in R&B

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mardell Maxwell has bigger dreams than Manhattan can hold. Pursuing a national recording career, Maxwell is hoping for a big break, as he sings in his song, "Dreams."

"I got dreams of bigger things/never gonna know what tomorrow brings."

He compares his style to the smooth, sensual vocals of R&B singer Ginuwine and his lyrical works to those of Luther Vandross. Maxwell is heating up the breadbasket of the United States, marketing his triple threat: singer, actor and dancer.

As a sophomore in music education, owner of Maxwell Entertainment, member of K-State Singers, employee at New Student Services, co-chair on the student alumni board, producer, writer and vocalist, this K-Stater has a lot to juggle.

Maxwell was born and raised in Junction City, where his passion for music began. He began singing in church in the children's choir at age four, in high school he had leading roles in many of the school musicals and served as Junction City High School's drum major.

Maxwell's mother said his upbringing has had a positive effect on his current outlook.

"I have always instilled in him everything has a purpose, whether it's to be good or not so good, it has a purpose," Daphne Maxwell said. "He is always looking for a window of opportunity even in adversity."

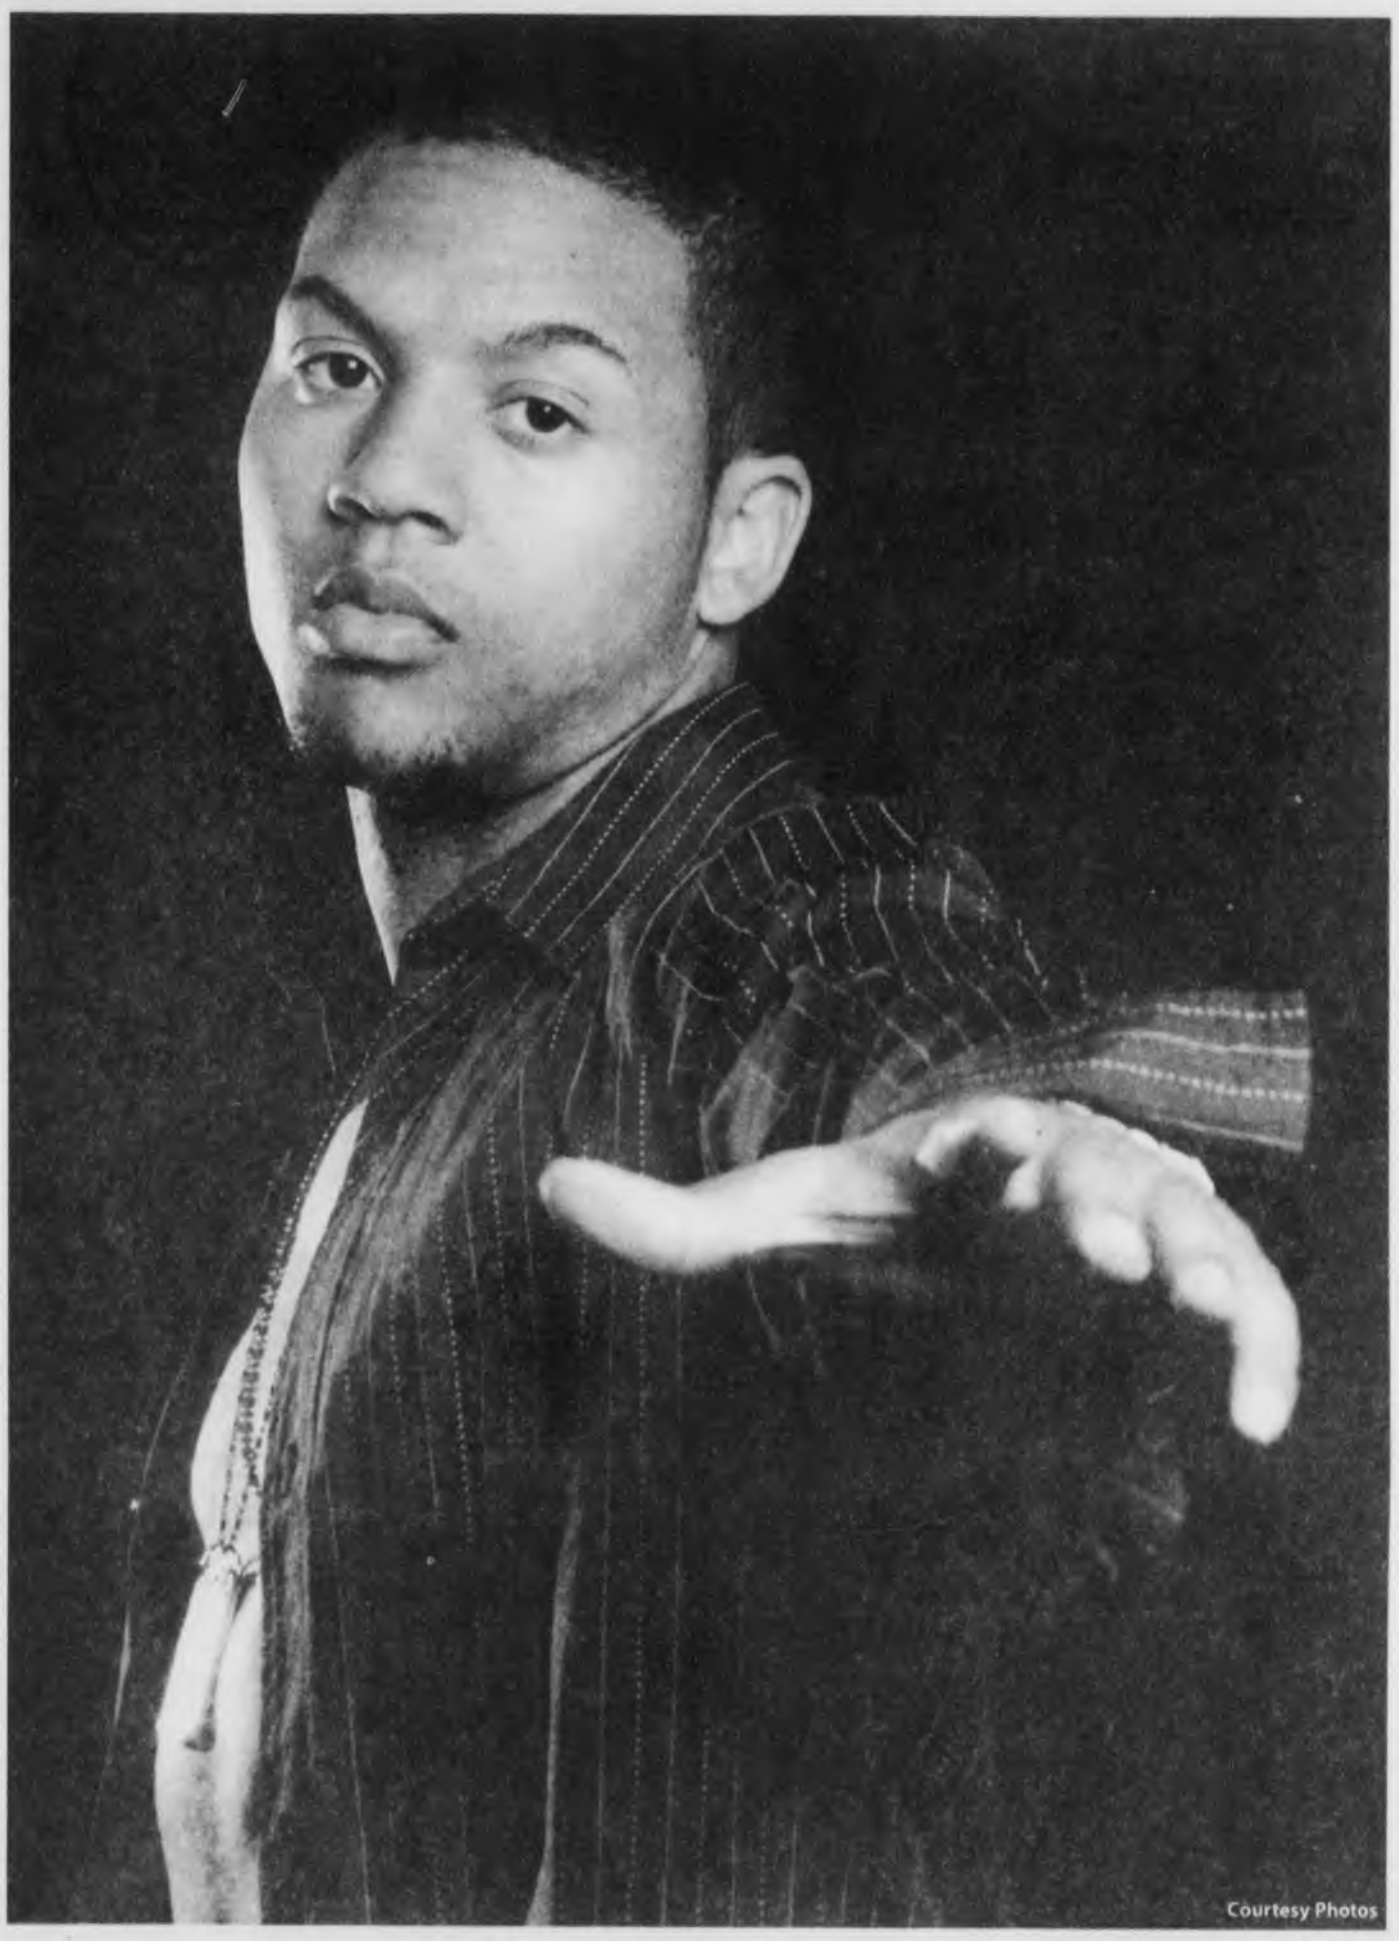
"Mardell is very much passionate about his music," Holliday said. "He goes beyond passion. It's like music pours out of his pores. That's what Mardell was made for: music."

In 2004, he released his first album, "The Freshman." The album was released independently and sold more than 1,500 copies in his hometown alone.

In the winter of 2005, Maxwell released his newest effort "Superstar."

"Every song on the CD, 'Superstar,' is a different aspect of love," Maxwell said.

He produced, wrote and recorded the songs on the album.



"When people put my CD into their stereo I want them to know that it is all me and is not industry-touched," he said.

Since the release of "Superstar," Maxwell has been busy.

"To balance everything, my mornings start very early and my nights are usually late, but if it is something you love, you don't mind making sacrifices," he said.

His day starts at 7:30 a.m.

"It is important that I stay in shape, so I am in the gym every morning," he said.

Courtesy Photos

Before class he handles any e-mails and business, then mid-morning he heads to campus for class and work. After K-State Singers practice, he gets home at 5 p.m., takes an hour of personal time, heads to vocal practice and spends the rest of the evening on homework.

Coming from a region with a lack of urban resources, Mardell has used the Internet to promote his music. Through Web sites such as Soundclick.com, Talentmatch.com, Mixposure.com and MardellMaxwell.com, he has reached many listeners.

In the past months he has traveled to cities such as St. Louis and San Antonio to perform while also doing several shows locally in front of his already established fans.

"He realizes he has a divine gift that has been given," Daphne said. "It's not just for him, but it is for him to give back."

In order for someone to be motivated, you first must be inspired, Daphne said. "His music will motivate others to make a change."

"Standing in the Way of Control"
Album review by Mark Sibilla

Punk music is known for its rebelliousness against the status quo, its unrefined production values and its raw, unbridled energy. Punk music, however, is not known for bands with talented vocalists or groups that try to evolve beyond their particular style or sound.

Then perhaps Portland, Ore., blues-punk band The Gossip has done the most punk thing a punk band can do by having a lead singer with actual pipes and deciding not to let their sound stagnate by continually polishing and refining it with each outing.

The Gossip's third album, "Standing in the Way of Control," is the band's cleanest-sounding record to date and also the best. The band has taken its minimalist blues-rock and added flecks of disco, funk, soul and glam-rock to the mix to create an empowering, exciting and danceable record.

The band consists of Brace Paine, guitar, Hannah Blilie, drums, and Beth Ditto, vocals. Their songs often consist of Paine and Blilie creating a powerful rhythmic groove bed over which Ditto lays her lyrics – often about heartache, hardship and learning to overcome.

Few bands, let alone punk bands, have a vocalist with a voice as powerful and soulful as Ditto's. One could easily compare her to the likes of Etta James or Billie Holiday, a less twangy Dolly Parton, or R&B/soul singers such as Dusty Springfield or Aretha Franklin.

and never outplay or cover her vocals.

The band's marvelous interplay is immediately ...ticeable in opening track, "Fire wi... Fire." Paine and Blilie make a pulsing grove built on fuzzy, low-end bass and shimmering high-hat over which Ditto sings of feminine empowerment.

When the band erupts into the chorus, Paine changes his riffing pattern, while Blilie compliments it with a drum breakdown as Ditto wails away.

The Gossip stretches its musical legs with "Coal to Diamonds," which is a slightly jazzy number that showcases some of Ditto's most soulful vocals on record.

"Yr Mangled Heart" runs along a driving guitar groove and some more disco high-hat. The coda of the song employs multi-tracked vocals as the guitar fades and the drum beat is turned up. I can just imagine the song playing in a club.

"Listen Up!" has a bass figure just as catchy as The White Stripes' "Seven Nation Army," and it is backed up by plenty of cowbell.

"Keeping You Alive" could earn Ditto comparisons to Gloria Gaynor and her disco hit "I Will Survive." Instead of a woman shaking off the constraints of heartache, Ditto sings reassurances to a suicidal friend.

The album closes quietly with "Dark Lines." Paine's bluesy bass line is complemented by Ditto's gentle coo, Blilie's delicately brushed drums and somber piano chords. The song is the lonely late night after the party from the rest of the album has subsided.

"Standing in the Way of Control" is a truly bracing album from a talented trio of musicians. The music is catchy and ultimately, uplifting and life-affirming.

"Desperate Housewives" got game

An interactive videogame based on the hit ABC series is in the works from Buena Vista Games and on target for a September release, the company said Friday.

Players take on the role of a new housewife who moves to Wisteria Lane and must interact with her neighbors in order to unlock the dark secrets of the seemingly idyllic neighborhood.

"As fans of the show would expect, the game is loaded with gossip, betrayal, murder and sex — you know, all the things women like," the game's producer, Mary Schuyler, told USA Today.

Campus leaders speak to Regents about needs

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Students' Advisory Committee met with Higher Education Caucus and Kansas Citizens for Higher Education to again address issues concerning students at a March 16 luncheon.

Student Body President Michael Burns said the advisory committee wanted to find an opportunity to visit with legislators about issues facing students in addition to Higher Education Day, which was Feb. 7.

According to the Kansas Board of Regents Web site, the Students' Advisory Committee was established by state statute in 1975. It consists of the student body president from each regents institution.

Duties of the committee include advising the board on the formulation of policy decisions on student affairs and identifying student concerns, according to the Web site.

The committee also organizes Higher Education Day, when students from each of the regents universities come together and visit with local legislators.

"This year, we specifically spoke about student health insurance, interest ownership and support for the governor's budget for fiscal year 2007," Burns said.

The following are several of the issues that the committee discussed with the regents at the March 16 meeting:

INTEREST OWNERSHIP

Burns said some of the non-state general fund accounts related to tuition and student fees generate interest each year. Kansas takes the interest revenue and puts it back in the state general fund for highways and projects, Burns said.

"As students, we were saying that we pay more and more tuition each year because we aren't receiving additional state funding," he said. "So we believe we should have the right to retain those funds and put them into the university for higher investment."

DEFERRED MAINTENANCE

Burns said K-State has more than $250 million of maintenance backlog in classroom and utility repairs. The regents has been paying back on a bond for some of the differed maintenance, Burns said.

"Next year during legislative session, regent universities and community colleges will come together with proposal," he said. "As we move forward next year, I think we will all come together."

According to a Nov. 17, 2005, press release from the regents, the current $584-million deferred-maintenance backlog in all regents schools would be eliminated through a $150-million bond issue, which the regents approved in November. The the debt would be serviced from the statewide Educational Building Fund, and a one-tenth of a cent sales-tax increase that would sunset after 10 years.

Burns said the additional meeting on March 16 did not yield as many legislators since the House was still in session.

"But any opportunity students can get to talk to them about issues affecting them is important," he said. "In that light, it was effective."

SGA Governmental Relations Committee Chair Matt King said Student Governing Association's meetings with state legislators this year have yielded a good response.

"We've gotten a lot of positive feedback from legislators that says 'we know you're here, we know you know what you're talking about and we're listening,'" King said. "I hope it is something that will continue for next year."

City to vote on concessions

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission will vote tonight at its meeting on whether to begin an experiment with the city's major concession stands.

The commission will vote on an agreement that would turn over management of six concession stands to Streeter Enterprises LLC. The following facilities would be affected: three stands in Frank Anneberg Park, two in Cico Park and one at the City Pool.

The agreement states that it would cost Streeter Enterprises LLC 12 percent of gross revenue from the facilities. The city expects that to come to about $10,000 before the agreement ends at the end of the year, which is half what it made annually from the stands after expenses.

City Finance Director Bernie Hayen said the facilities are being outsourced in part due to recent revelations of funds being stolen from them. He said there were also problems in keeping track of inventory because there was no tracking of what was sold.

Hayen said the stands in question bring in almost $80,000 in revenue annually, with about $20,000 of it left over after expenses. He said the money is put into the city's general fund each year.

Hayen said the city needed to find a way to have accountability before operations begin at the facilities next week, and had two options.

The company could install cash registers at each location, which would have cost the city about $5,000 and establish a system of accounting for inventory, Hayen said.

The other option was for the city to take a route used by most cities and outsource the labor to an outside organization. Hayen said they could also charge the outside organization based on percentage or a flat annual rent.

The city requested proposals for the facilities, and three companies responded with percentages they'd pay to the city. The amounts requested by the companies were Streeter with 12 percent; Bocker's Catering, 10 percent; and Little Apple Concessions, 5 percent.

The agreement will make it Streeter's duty to keep track of inventory and sales at the facilities and worry about whether it's getting all its profits. The city's cut comes from overall revenue.

"We don't know, and frankly, we don't care," Hayen said of the methods Streeter might use.

Brad Streeter, owner of Streeter Enterprises LLC and Vista Drive-In, 1911 Tuttle Creek Blvd., said he would install cash registers at the facilities and staff them with his own employees and new hires. The city has been staffing the facilities with seasonal workers.

Streeter said his family managed city concession stands in 1960, and he worked at them as a boy.

"I've been in this business for 50 years almost," Streeter said. "I think the key is great people. I think our staff is some of the best people in the industry."

The agreement requires Streeter to provide all labor for the concessions stands and be open for all events scheduled at the areas the facilities serve. The city must pay for the maintenance of all the facilities' equipment and give Streeter the right to use it. The city must provide water, sewer and electricity to the facilities.

Streeter will have to obtain all the products for the facilities, but must honor an agreement the city has in place with Pepsi Bottling Co. for soft drinks.

The agreement will last through the end of 2006. Hayen said the city might evaluate the arrangement at its end and then decide whether to return to city operation or make another agreement for coming years of operation.

Commissioner Tom Phillips said he expects he will vote in favor of the agreement.

"It's a good idea to see if it's a a realistic approach to give this over to the private sector," Phillips said.

say their goodbyes.

"The day before, when we had gone to the hospital, he wasn't doing very well," B.J. said. "My mom came out and told me not to go in there, because she didn't want me to see my dad like that."

"When we left the hospital that night, we were told that the next phone call I got was not going to be a good one, and so when the phone rang in the middle of the night, I assumed the worst," said Nancy, an English teacher for more than 30 years at Blue Valley High School. "The nurse said 'I don't know how to tell you this, but your husband is awake, and he is asking for you and B.J. and Jennifer and Jim (Jennifer's husband)."'

B.J. said he didn't get much sleep that night and remembers the phone ringing around 2 a.m.

"That night, we tried to go asleep and I remember the phone ringing in the middle of the night," B.J. said. "I immediately thought it was the call to say that 'your dad had died,' and I heard my mom walking down the hallway to come down to my room. I looked up at her, and she said, 'Your dad is awake and he said he wants his family, and he's really hungry.'"

"I've never gone through so many emotions in the span of 30 seconds because the phone rings and you feel one thing, and my mom came in the room and I was just waiting for her to tell me and when she opened the door, she had a shocked look on her face and it kind of surprised me at first because I wasn't thinking it was that much of a surprise," B.J. said. "It was the longest and shortest car ride I've ever been in, because I had no idea what to think.

"When we got there, it was a shock to me — that was our miracle."

Nancy said when she and the family arrived in the early morning hours of Nov. 1, Bill was sitting up drinking water and asking, "Where's everybody been?"

"We had all said our goodbyes so that was our miracle," Nancy said.

The next day, Bill was released to hospice and spent the next few days talking with visitors and spending time with his family.

"He had told us, several times, that he was given the chance to come back and say his goodbyes because the kids didn't have the chance to do that when (Bill) said, 'Let's do the chemo, and we will see if that works,'" Nancy said. "He got to come home so, not only did he regain consciousness, but he got to see the kids and other family members and other friends."

Bill died on Nov. 15, 2004, but B.J. said he we was thankful for the opportunity to spend those final days with his father.

"We were always praying for a miracle and for me, it was a miracle because I had never got that chance to sit and talk with him," B.J. said. "Not many people get that chance to spend those last moments in their mom or dad's life like that."

After Bill's death B.J. came back to Manhattan and his teammates — with a little push from his mother.

"There came a point, where I said, 'I have to go back to work and you have to go back to work and no one, especially your father, wouldn't want you staying around here,'" Nancy said. "I didn't want B.J. to ever think that he had to be here to do things for me.

"The best way (B.J and Jennifer) could honor their father was to continue their lives, because he would have been very upset to think that they would put their own lives on hold."

B.J. said his first game on the mound without his father in the stands, like he had been for as long as B.J. can remember, was difficult.

"He drove to Manhattan every time we had a game and was always up there with my mom," B.J. said. "It was really hard at the beginning because I wanted to be there for my mom and my sister.

"It was pretty difficult the first few games last year because I had to watch my mom come to games by herself, but between her and my sister and all my friends, all my teammates and all the coaches, they've been 100 percent supportive."

Coach Hill said he wasn't surprised at how B.J. was able to come back after Bill's death.

"Losing his father was very tough," said Hill, who is in his third year at K-State and fifth overall with B.J. "He's just a very resilient kid, and he's the type of kid that's going to be successful in life."

B.J. said going through a season without his dad has helped him move on.

"This year it is a lot easier because I've went through a year of it; I know kind of how it feels to go out on the mound," B.J. said. "I still think about him every day and that doesn't change, but it's more of a happy-sad now than just a lonely-sad."

Along with his senior leadership and helping the Wildcats to their best start in school history at 17-3, B.J. will continue a life in baseball after graduating in May, regardless if he is drafted by a Major League Baseball team.

In December 2005, B.J. was brought on as an intern of the flagship, semi-professional-team, the Junction City Generals, of the newly-formed Central Baseball League and will take over as the assistant general manager of the team when his season is finished.

Until K-State's season is over, B.J. is writing articles for the Web site, talking with city commissioners and making sure everything is set for the upcoming summer.

"They've made it really easy on me," B.J. said. "They let me concentrate on baseball. They are baseball people too, so they know kind of what I'm going through."

After his internship, B.J. said he will oversee the day-to-day operations, find players, talk to college coaches and make the schedule for the team.

Hill said B.J. will make a great assistant general manager for the Generals.

"He would be one of the first guys that I would hire doing something like that, because I know he's going to be successful," Hill said. "He's going to pay attention to detail and all the little things he has to do to make that a successful operation."

Nancy said she couldn't be happier for her son.

"B.J. said to me, 'If I could have written a description of the perfect job — this would be it,'" Nancy said. "I know that this is what he wants to do. It's what he is interested in and he still gets to stay in the Manhattan area. I am thrilled, and I'm even more thrilled that he will be close."

But until his season is over, B.J. will continue to help K-State turn the corner in baseball and carry the memory of his father to the mound.

"(My dad) was the first guy to say, when he was getting sick, 'Don't treat me differently or any of that stuff and be there for your team,' and that's what he would want me to do," B.J. said, "I think about him every time I'm out on the mound because I know he's watching."

For the future of the university, Wefald said he hopes K-State will continue to produce a high number of scholarship winners. Wefald said another goal is for K-State to become a top 10 land-grant university.

These goals and dreams come from a man who said he looks at the glass as half-full.

"It's all about optimism," Wefald said. "I will not work with negative people. I want to work with people who are optimistic and have hope."

Wefald's wife, Ruth Ann, said to cope with the stress of his job, her husband approaches life as a positive thinker.

"Things rarely get him down," Ruth Ann said. "If it does, he bounces back really quickly. He tends to approach things very positively.

"He wants the university to do well."

After helping K-State bounce back from decreasing enrollment and a poor image, Ruth Ann said several universities asked her husband to come work for them. She said his response indicated why he stayed at K-State.

"I remember at one point, he said, 'I enjoy going to work every single day,'" Ruth Ann said. "Why would you leave something you enjoy doing?"

an amendment by Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., that would protect humanitarian aid to illegal immigrants and plans for a temporary guest worker program allowing non-citizens to work in the United States under government supervision.

Dale Herspring, professor of political science, said illegal immigration is one of the most difficult problems facing the United States today, and that Senate discussion on the issue during an election year likely would be polarized.

"I worry that we're going to be saying are you a good guy or a bad guy, based on your position on the issue," he said. "It could be a very nasty, bitter debate."

On the issue of humanitarian aid to illegal immigrants, Herspring said the wording of any regulation would be very important in defining what types of aid, if any, would be illegal.

"The devil is in the details," he said. "If a person knowingly helps an illegal immigrant, that's a problem. But if a group is offering free meals, they can't check the status of every person who shows up."

Emily Hagy, junior in architecture, said that legislation should make it easier for immigrants to enter the United States legally, more difficult.

"The House's legislation seems really strict," she said. "Making things illegal won't stop them from happening. I think the Senate is on the right track, but we still need to do a lot more."

Hagy said she approved of the Senate's amendment to the immigration bill allowing charitable groups to aid illegal aliens.

"These are non-profit organizations. Although they're constricted by the laws of our country, their purpose isn't. They should be allowed to focus on whatever group they want," she said.

Sean Yancey, senior in wildlife biology, said that while he supported stricter enforcement of current immigration policy, he did not think a fence along the U.S.-Mexican border was the answer.

"I think it would be more a waste of money than anything," he said. "I don't think 700 miles of fence is going to keep people from crossing the border."

Yancey said the Senate's proposed temporary guest-worker program might be the best way to deal with more than 11 million illegal immigrants already living in the United States.

"I don't think we should grant them citizenship or send them back," he said. "We should settle on some middle ground."

K-State advances to WNIT championship game Friday

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats won their first overtime game in five tries this season and advanced to their first-ever Women's National Invitation Tournament Championship game with a 57-56 win over Western Kentucky on Tuesday in Bramlage Coliseum.

The women will face Marquette (22-10) at 7 p.m. Friday at Bramlage to contend for the WNIT title.

Dietz said she was just looking to make a play for her team when she stole the ball from Western Kentucky's Tifany Zaragoza.

"I knew we needed a defensive stop, and she kind of put the ball out there," said Dietz, who finished with seven assists. "I went after it, hoping for a jump ball or something and it landed in my hands."

Despite the Wildcats (23-10) only scoring four points in the extra period, the Lady Toppers (27-7) only managed three. All seven of Western Kentucky's losses have come on the road.

"Credit Western Kentucky for coming into a hostile environment and ignoring it," Patterson said. "It was a very challenging game because of their mental toughness."

Like their quarterfinal game against Nebraska, the Wildcats got off to a slow start in the first half. K-State shot just 37 percent from the field and was 1-of-6 from behind the three-point line.

Although K-State forced 17 Western Kentucky turnovers in the first half, the Wildcats were outrebounded by the Lady Toppers 20-9 and trailed 24-23 at the break.

Junior Claire Coggins also had a rough first half.

Eighteen seconds into the game, Coggins had her feet taken out from under her while jumping for a high pass and landed hard on the court. Coggins sat out the next three

Assistant dean selected

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jeffrey Katz, professor of management, recently was chosen as the new assistant dean for the College of Business Administration.

Katz
PROFESSOR

Katz also is the director of the Center for Leadership in the College of Business Administration.

The position takes effect on July 1. Katz said he is delighted to have been chosen for the position and said he knows it will generate several new responsibilities for him.

"It is the job of the assistant dean to be the director of graduate programs," Katz said. "I will be working more directly on a daily basis with graduate students, and also recruiting students into our MBA and other such programs."

Katz began his education in his home state of Arizona, earning his bachelor's and master's degrees from Arizona State University. He was employed in the field of financial services as a senior bank regulator in Washington, D.C.

Later, Katz pursued his doctorate in strategic management at the University of Florida. He became a professor at K-State in 1995.

Katz will replace David Vruwink, an associate professor of accounting who has been assistant dean for about five years. Vruwink will return to teaching accounting classes.

Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration, appointed Katz to the position. He said Katz is well-prepared for what lies ahead.

"I have every confidence that Dr. Katz will provide the leadership the graduate program needs to advance to new levels of achievement," he said. "His creativity and commitment to excellence will offer our students, both on campus and via distance learning, the highest quality graduate education possible."

Dr. Brian Niehoff, professor and head of the Department of Management, said he has known Katz for as long as Katz has been at K-State, and the professor will bring new perspective to the job.

"I think that he is very energetic," Niehoff said. "He brings a lot of new ideas to the position, and he's got the ability to implement new programs if necessary."

Katz said his goal as assistant dean will be to continue Vruwink's work.

"Our programs are continuing to increase in test scores and in salaries of leaving graduates," he said. "I want to help continue the momentum of this program."

Volunteers trained to help hospice patients

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Homecare and Hospice is offering its spring volunteer training during the next five weeks.

Chris Nolte, director of development for Homecare and Hospice, 323 Poyntz Ave., said while volunteer training started Monday, students who missed the first session can make it up.

Volunteer training
When: 6:30 - 8 p.m. Mondays through April 24
Where: Homecare and Hospice conference room, 323 Poyntz Ave.
How much: Free and open to the public
For more information, call (785) 537-0688.

Nolte said the training is five sessions, and each session will feature presentations by different professionals within the hospice team, including social workers, volunteers and nurses.

"Volunteers will hear about what their roles are in hospice care situations," Nolte said.

Those interested in volunteering also must complete a background check and get a tuberculous shot, she said.

Volunteers will receive certification the last day of training, April 24. Once volunteers are certified, they can volunteer at Manhattan's hospice program, or any other hospice program.

Hospices are for those who have been diagnosed with a terminal illness and a doctor has told them they have six months or fewer to live, Nolte said.

Volunteering includes helping clients with transportation for errands and to medical appointments, as well as serving as a companion for clients, Nolte said. Volunteers can choose how much they want to volunteer.

"We also have 'respite' volunteers, who come in the house and provide relief for the caregiver of the client," Nolte said.

Homecare and Hospice has served clients in the Manhattan, Junction City and

1 million French take to streets in protest of youth labor law

By John Leicester
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS – More than 1 million people poured into the streets across France; strikers disrupted air, rail and bus travel Tuesday – even shutting down the Eiffel Tower – in the largest nationwide protest over a youth labor law.

Scattered violence erupted in Paris, and riot police used water cannons and tear gas to disperse several thousand youths who pelted them with stones and bottles after an otherwise peaceful march. More than 240 people were arrested.

Unions and the leftist opposition joined in solidarity with the angry students for the one-day strike, increasing the pressure on Prime Minister Dominique de Villepin to withdraw the measure that makes it easier to fire young workers.

Although Villepin held firm, cracks opened in his conservative government. Interior Minister Nicolas Sarkozy, in a clear break with Villepin, suggested suspending the law to allow for negotiations.

With the government in crisis, President Jacques Chirac canceled a trip planned for later in the week to stay in Paris.

Police and organizers' estimates for the number of marchers varied greatly, but both showed that the protest movement is growing in

K-State notches 29th Truman scholar

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kourtney Bettinger, senior in modern languages, was a recipient of the prestigious Truman Scholarship for 2006.

Bettinger is the 29th student from K-State to receive this honor.

"I had been on a cruise for spring break, and President (Jon) Wefald called my mom and told her," Bettinger said. "They didn't tell me until I returned home, though. I was so excited to learn that I would be a part of this great opportunity."

For her prize, Bettinger receives $30,000, preferred admission to graduate school, a summer internship and a place at the Truman Leadership Week.

"I may not have nailed every question, but I think that my passion for what I want to do came out, and they could see that I was definite about what I want to do."

Bettinger said she felt the questions she was asked were meant to pressure her to see if she knew what she wanted, and if she didn't, it would have shown.

"It just shows that I know what I want to do, and that it's not a random thing," she said.

Wefald was the first to inform Bettinger's family of the news, and he said it is a tribute to the K-State faculty, staff and students.

"Students here go to class, do the work and have an incredible will," Wefald said. "Kansas State has more Trumans than any other public university by five. We're beating students from Harvard, Stanford and Yale. We have the best and the brightest in America."

Wefald compared Bettinger's scholastic achievement to being a "Heisman finalist, a first team all-American."

"If this were sports, it would be all over the news," Wefald said. "But because it's academic-related, it doesn't get as much press. But Kourtney is an exceptional student, a great K-Stater."

Bettinger said she had only praise for her competitors.

"Everyone who made it that far was a strong applicant," Bettinger said. "I just think it's so amazing to be able to have this incredible experience."

Daylight Donuts opens for business

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Daylight Donuts, 1101 Moro Ave., opened for business Tuesday.

On its first day, the doughnut shop sold 80 dozen doughnuts, which amounted to $492, said co-owner Anthony Moeder.

Moeder, sophomore in computer engineering, said his goal is to earn revenue in the early hours of the morning after the bars close.

"We didn't have much on (Monday morning)," he said. "We expect that it will pick up in the later days of the week."

Moeder's partner in the franchise is his father, Andrew Moeder, of Ulysses, Kan. Anthony Moeder said he had a lot of family help in starting the business.

Location: 1101 Moro Ave.

"My father helped a lot," he said. "The rest of the family pitched in too, along with my grandparents."

Moeder said a doughnut shop was missing from Manhattan, so he decided to open one.

"One Saturday, I woke up and wanted some doughnuts and the closest shops were in Wamego (Kan.) and Ogden (Kan.)," he said.

"I started researching to find out what it would take to bring a doughnut shop to Manhattan."

A representative from the corporate offices of Daylight Donuts in Tulsa, Okla., sent Moeder information about how to start a franchise, he said.

"He helped me quite a bit," Moeder said. "He told me what to look for in a building and what I should spend on a monthly lease."

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said she hopes the shop will bring new customers to Aggieville.

"It will hopefully create more traffic and widen our customer base," she said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Students should consider work in hospice care

Homecare and Hospice, 323 Poyntz Ave., now is offering its spring hospice volunteer training.

Training sessions are one night a week for five weeks, and volunteers receive certification the last night of their training.

Students should take advantage of the free training sessions and gain volunteer hours. Hospices are for those who have been diagnosed with a terminal illness and have six or fewer months to live.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Those who volunteer can help clients with transportation for errands and to medical appointments and can be a companion for clients, providing conversation and diversion.

Volunteers also can spend time with clients in their homes while clients' loved ones take some time away from caretaker duties.

For those who might be uncomfortable volunteering with a hospice client, Homecare and Hospice also has clients who are not diagnosed with a terminal illness. These clients also would appreciate the time and comfort of volunteers.

Regardless of their academic majors, students should take advantage of the volunteer opportunity and give something back to the terminally ill and their caretakers in the community.

A reasonable price

K-State's tuition cheaper than other colleges'

Nationwide, private and public institutions have dealt with the continual and recently unsteady rise of tuition costs.

CHRISTINA FORSBERG

In the 2004-05 academic year, according to research done by K-State's Economics Club, tuition increased by almost 11 percent. When funds run low for students, tuition, even before grumblings about textbook prices, is the first complaint that comes to mind.

When that statement of account arrives in the mail, glaring with vociferous appetite at the student that will meet its monetary demands, was there ever a better scapegoat?

Hold on and take a look at the numbers first – tuition might not be as outrageous as it seems.

According to a recent press release from the Kansas Board of Regents, six of Kansas' public universities have tuition rates that are almost a third below the national and regional averages of public universities.

True, our tuition is climbing, but by that comparison, we seem to be doing a better job of keeping our tuition rates low in the heart of the United States.

But if tuition is so docile in Kansas, there must be more than one cause for rising student costs.

Take, for example, housing costs.

The findings from the Economics Club indicated in the past academic year, local college housing costs rose about five percent.

Tuition can't take all the blame. Additionally, take into account that, by the university's estimates of students' budgets, housing takes up 36 percent of students' disposable income, while the higher tuition rate occupies only 32 percent.

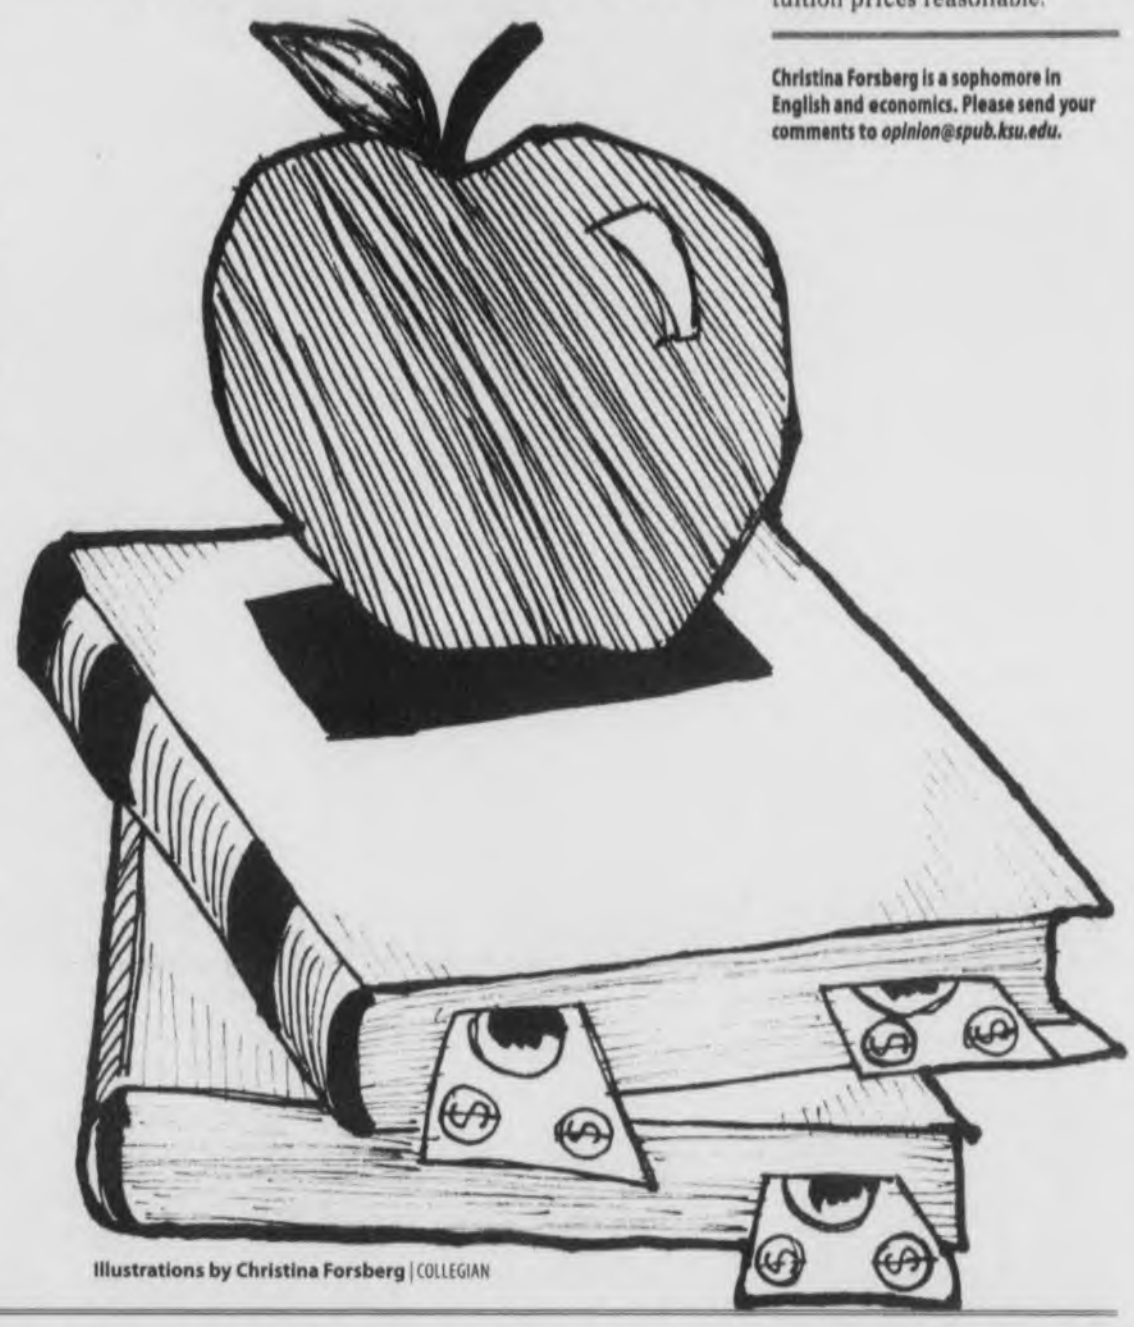
Students shouldn't be discouraged if they feel shortchanged now. Let's keep in mind that despite the rising prices of tuition, it's the most valuable expenditure because paying for knowledge and potentially investing in a career leads to lifetime benefits. Room and board costs, however, occur regardless of whether you attend college.



It's no surprise that tuition will continue to rise, but we hope for a slow and steady pace.

One thing to keep in mind is that legislative aid to public institutions affects the pricing of tuition paid by individual students and might cause those public institutions to raise tuition.

In President Jon Wefald's 20th State of the University Address last fall, he said the amount of the university's budget that received funds from state legislature has declined from more than 40 percent to 25 percent in the last eight to 10 years, but college enrollment is still at its highest ever.

Parents and students seem to understand the value in higher learning, because demand for a college education is increasing despite rising tuition. And while nobody wants to see higher costs for tuition, keep in mind that here in Kansas we're still doing a fine job of keeping our tuition prices reasonable.

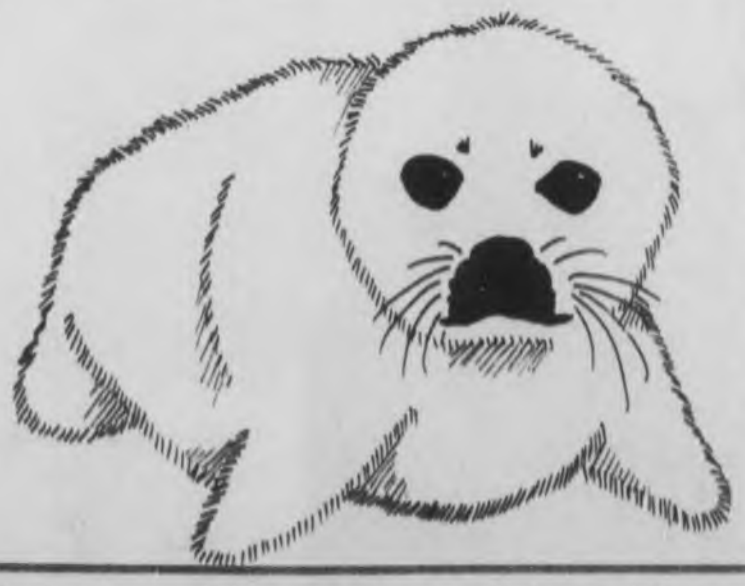
Seal hunters should follow humane practices

On March 25, in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence in Canada, the annual seal hunt began. Two days later, the seal death count had already reached more than 5,400, and by the end of the hunt, there will be more than 300,000 young seals murdered.

KELSEY CHILDRESS

According to the Humane Society of the United States, 98.5 percent of seals killed will be two months old or younger.

Hunters club the seals to death with a spiked pick, believing that shooting the seals with guns will damage their pelts. Many times, these seals are skinned while they are still alive and conscious. Obviously, these hunters do not meet humane guidelines, and no authorities are there to enforce them.



The hunters maintain that the seal hunt is a tradition for the families who live in the area, and the profits made from the seals contribute to their low income during this season. Even though the harp seals garnish a profit for these families, they should be killed in a more humane way and not be skinned or dragged across the ice by boathooks while they still are living.

Young baby seals, who are sometimes only three weeks old, have been victim to the killings as well. These pups are too young to be subject to such brutality.

The harp seal population has been reduced by these killings and human development in their habitat. The Humane Society is trying to raise awareness to prevent this slaughter. On the first day of the hunt this year, a group of activists from the Humane Society of the United States navigated a small inflatable boat around the coast in Saint Lawrence, hoping to find baby harp seals to protect from the hunters.

As the boat made its way around the waters and came upon a sealing ship, one hunter became furious and flung seal intestines at the activists, and the ship attempted to create a wake so the inflatable boat would capsize.

The animal rights activists were within their legal rights, as they were in free waters.

The hunt brings in about $14 million a year, but no amount is enough to justify the inhumane brutality these hunters show the wonderful marine mammals and the inconsideration they show their fellow citizens. No one should have the right to kill animals in any way they please, without looking out for the animals' well-being. They can feel pain just like people, and it is our duty to make sure they are treated humanely.

This year, with Paul and Heather McCartney as spokespersons in the media campaign, the Humane Society has created a petition to refuse to buy and eat Canadian seafood, which makes a $3 billion yearly profit. Already more than 220,000 people have signed it, and many more are doing their part in the way of clothing or donations to raise awareness of this gruesome hunt.

For more information on the seal hunt or to sign the petition, please visit www.hsus.org.

85 promotions granted

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

President Jon Wefald approved the promotion of 22 faculty members to full professor, 31 to associate professor, and 32 faculty members to tenure. These promotions will go into effect July 1.

"Obtaining tenure is a critical milestone for those hired under a tenure-tracking system in an academic institution," Hollis said. "At it's most basic level, earning tenure helps ensure that I get to keep my job at K-State. It is also a vote of confidence that I add value to K-State's educational mission."

Hollis said he was eligible for tenure because he, and the other qualifying faculty, met the requirements set forth in the Tenure and Promotion documents of both his department and college.

Faculty members at these levels looked at his accomplishments during his years at K-State and determined Hollis had performed at a level worthy of consideration and voted to grant him tenure.

"When I found out, it was both a big relief and also a very nice endorsement that I provided the kind of value that K-State was looking for when they hired me," Hollis said. "It's always a good feeling when a group of your peers says you are worthy of your keep."

Hollis began a career in education because of his love of learning and of people.

"To me, there is no bigger 'high' than watching that light bulb turn on in someone's head when they understand a new concept, and you know you made their life better," he said.

Diane McGrath, associate professor of secondary education, received a promotion to full professor.

McGrath said she was pleased and honored to receive this promotion.

"In my time at K-State, I feel most proud of building an exciting doctoral specialization in educational computing and writing a series of well-received articles for teachers on project-based learning," McGrath said.

McGrath began in the field of cognitive psychology, but said she realized she was interested in not only the theory and research about how people think and solve problems, but also in the application of those theories to schooling.

She said she also is interested in what computers could do for teaching and learning.

"The most rewarding part of my career in education has been working with graduate students from all over the world," McGrath said. "I learn so much from them."

Laura Armbrust was granted both a promotion to associate professor and tenure. She has been an educator for five years.

"I think what made me eligible was my years of service, and how I have done throughout my faculty appointment," Armbrust said. "I wanted to be a professor both to work with students, and to do research, clinical research being my favorite. It's like being a veterinarian while teaching."

Armbrust said she loves seeing students go out and succeed, and watching residents and interns she has taught go into the world and excel.

A piece titled "Grandpa's Hat" hangs in the Chang Gallery in Seaton Hall. The gallery will be on display until Friday.

3 faculty members display art

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The artwork of three K-State faculty members is featured in the exhibit "The Other Side," on display in the Chang Gallery at Seaton Hall.

The exhibit, which runs through Friday, features the oil paintings of Jim Coffman, professor of clinical sciences; the watercolor paintings of Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement; and the photographs of Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance.

Krause said although he had worked with Coffman and Rawson for years, the men discovered their shared interest in art by accident.

"Over an early morning cup of coffee, we talked about art and discovered we were all involved in it in different areas," he said.

Coffman said "The Other Side" exhibit came about when Dennis Law, dean and professor in the College of Architecture, Planning and Design, overheard one of the group's conversations about art.

"We'd always say that sometime we should get together and do an exhibit, and one day he heard us," he said.

Law and Diane Potts, assistant to the dean, encouraged the men to create an exhibit, and offered Seaton's Chang Gallery as a venue.

Rawson said although photography had been his hobby for years, his participation in "The Other Side" exhibit marked his first art show.

He said the feedback he received on the exhibit was positive.

"There have been quite a few nice compliments," he said. "It's been really rewarding."

The link between higher administration and art is stronger than many people might think, Krause said.

"In administration, you look at how to develop creative solutions to problems, which you also do in your artwork," he said. "It kind of gives students a different view of their administrators here at K-State."

Coffman said he, Rawson and Krause had not yet decided whether they would create another art exhibit together in the future.

"It depends on how much time we have to do some more work," he said. "Maybe we'll have a reunion show in five years – that would be fun."

City outsources concession stands

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Six Manhattan concession stands will be operated this summer by a local company instead of by the city.

The Manhattan City Commission, at its Tuesday night meeting, approved an agreement with Streeter Enterprises LLC to have it manage three facilities in Frank Anneberg Park, two in CiCo Park and one at the City Park Pool. The city will receive 12 percent of the stands' total revenue.

City Finance Director Bernie Hayen said the six stands bring in just less than $80,000 in revenue per year, with about $20,000 left over after expenses to put into the city general fund. He estimated the city's cut to measure about $10,000 before the contract ends at the end of the year.

The agreement is seen as a solution to concerns about a lack of accounting for inventory and income from the stands under city control, Hayen said. The city considered installing cash registers and creating a better inventory system for the facilities, but chose to make it Streeter Enterprises' responsibility instead.

"I wish you a lot of success. I'll buy a lot of hot dogs," Mayor Ed Klimek said to the company's owner, Brad Streeter.

Streeter also owns Vista Drive-In, 1911 Tuttle Creek Blvd., and other local businesses.

The stands had been staffed by seasonal workers. Streeter said he will staff the stands with new hires and current employees, and the employees will be able to transfer to his other businesses. He said he will install cash registers at each location, but stressed he has faith in his employees.

The agreement requires the company to open the facilities for business whenever the locations they serve have events.

Streeter said the stands will provide the normal concession fare as well as some less common items like salads, funnel cakes and philly-cheese steak sandwiches.

"We're going to listen to what people want, and we're going to provide what they want," Streeter said.

Cats win 1st overtime game

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It started with a game-tying, desperation 3-point shot by Western Kentucky followed by two botched free throws by K-State, and for the fifth time this season, K-State needed an extra five minutes to resolve a game.

"There's absolutely no excuse for that," junior Claire Coggins said about her two missed free throws that would have won the game in regulation. "I've got to put those in. I was so mad after those; I was so mad. You did not even want to talk to me after those free throws.

"I was so mad at myself, but, you know, it's OK. We regrouped, and we came out and had a chance to win the game."

One small statistic haunted K-State at the beginning of overtime – the Wildcats had lost all four previous overtime games this season, the most recent being in the second round of the Big 12 Tournament, where the Wildcats lost 79-74 in overtime to Baylor.

"I don't think anybody was thinking about the past games at all," Coggins said. "We're not bothered by anything we've done in the past. Obviously we weren't bothered by what we had done in the regular time of that game."

Coach Deb Patterson said being at home in Bramlage Coliseum helped K-State ease into the overtime period. The Wildcats – who averaged 5,791 fans per home game this season – played in front of a crowd of 7,538 Tuesday night.

"I think probably the environment here, going into overtime and throughout the game, was very much in our favor," Patterson said. "Obviously, I think our players didn't overreact going into overtime.

"Neither of us was very good offensively tonight, and yet on the defensive end in terms of competitiveness and toughness, I though both teams brought it."

It was sophomore Kimberly Dietz who made the game-winning plays on Tuesday. With three minutes remaining in overtime, Dietz scored, putting K-State up by two points at 56-54.

However it was a steal by Dietz with 15 seconds remaining and going one-for-two from the free-throw line on the subsequent foul that earned the Wildcats a berth in the Women's National

CBB | Wildcats shutout Chicago State 4-0

Senior Chase Mitchell tossed seven scoreless innings and K-State's four early runs proved to be enough as the Wildcats got back on the winning track with a 4-0 shutout of Chicago State on Tuesday night at Tointon Family Stadium.

With the win, K-State moved to 18-3 on the season, while Chicago State dropped to 3-15.

Mitchell earned the win after throwing 7.0 innings Tuesday to move to 3-0 on the season. Mitchell retired the first nine batters in order and 13 of the first 14 batters faced as the senior scattered six hits and struck out six with no walks.

NFL | Graffanino signed by Royals on Tuesday

FORT MYERS, Fla. — Infielder Tony Graffanino was claimed off waivers Tuesday by the Kansas City Royals, returning to the team that traded him to the Boston Red Sox eight months ago.

Graffanino

"It's a place I'm going where I feel like I'm wanted and I should get decent playing time there," Graffanino said. "This wasn't a good situation for me."

He batted .319 in 51 games for the Red Sox after being traded July 19, then lost his second-base job when Boston obtained Mark Loretta from San Diego on Dec. 7 for catcher Doug Mirabelli.

BKC | Sampson close to deal with Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS — Oklahoma coach Kelvin Sampson and Indiana were completing contract details Tuesday that would make him the Hoosiers' next basketball coach, a person close to the negotiations told The Associated Press.

Sampson

The deal was expected to be announced shortly, according to the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity because talks were not complete.

The Sampson-to-Indiana story was first reported by ESPN earlier in the day. Sampson spent the last 12 seasons at Oklahoma, re-establishing the Sooners as a national contender. This year, Oklahoma went 20-9 and lost in the first round of the NCAA tournament to Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

The 50-year-old Sampson would replace Mike Davis, who announced Feb. 16 he was resigning after leading the Hoosiers the past six seasons. Davis went 115-79, became the first Indiana coach to win 20 games in each of his first three seasons and led the Hoosiers to the 2002 national championship game just two seasons after Bob Knight was fired.

NBA | Miller's jersey to be retired by Pacers Thursday

Miller

"When I came to Indiana, nobody knew what the Pacers were about," Miller said. "We were cellar dwellers for so long. I wanted people to think of us the way they thought about Chicago, Detroit, L.A."

SPRING FOOTBALL | 2006

Positions up for grabs

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The beginning of spring practice raises a lot of questions about each player and who will play what position next year.

The position most scrutinized this spring will be that of the starting quarterback.

K-State has five players with a legitimate shot at earning the title of starting quarterback.

The Wildcats return three quarterbacks who have started in at least six games in their careers and also brings in a redshirt freshman and a highly-touted true freshman recruit.

Meier
QUARTERBACK

"I'm very excited about the quarterbacks and about the prospects of these young people," coach Ron Prince said. "It's too early to say how that is going to go, and I am just as interested and excited as everybody else is to find out who is going to be the quarterback."

Prince said he wants his players to be able to handle, and even thrive, under the pressure of having a lot competition at one position.

"The competition brings out the very best in people," Prince said. "I see that as a very positive thing, and I am looking for competitive tension throughout the team.

"We are trying to create an environment where every single player on the team feels like he is competing for something, and the quarterback position is no different."

Sophomore Allan Evridge started six games and appeared in nine of the 11 games last year for the Wildcats. He ended the season as the most prolific freshman passer in school history with 1,365 yards and six touchdowns.

Evridge's performance last year earned him honorable mention All-America honors from The Sporting News.

Senior Allen Webb appeared in eight games last year, starting five, and went 4-1 as K-State's starter. He threw for 850 yards and had five passing touchdowns.

Webb played in 10 games in Team moves into phase 2, installs systems, places players

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

If the K-State football program is anything in 2006, coach Ron Prince knows his team will be different from the 2005 version.

"One of the things that I think is very misunderstood about sports is that the team is reborn every year," Prince said. "With the amount of people leaving your roster, with the amount of players whose talents are ascending – some players' talents might be descending – and then the new players coming on to the team, it's impossible for the team to be the same team or even pick up or carry on from what has happened in the past."

K-State's new look, whatever it might be, was the overarching theme Tuesday as Prince and a few assistant coaches and players met with the media a day after opening Prince's first spring practice in Manhattan.

For the first time in 17 years, K-State began its 15 spring practices without coach Bill Snyder running the show, but for the second-straight year, the Wildcats are coming off a losing record the year before.

However, as Prince and the Wildcats have said numerous times, this spring is all about new faces, schemes and identities.

"It's all about that rebirth," senior running back Thomas Clayton said. "Our main objective is obviously to win the Big 12. Whatever it takes in order for us to be reborn into that Big 12 Championship team, that's what we're going to do."

The Wildcats began practice Monday, which began phase two of the plan Prince introduced when he was hired to succeed Snyder. While phase one involved recruiting, hiring assistant coaches and evaluating players from a physical and leadership standpoint, phase two moves into installing the offensive, defensive and special teams systems and placing the right players in the right spots on the field.

"You can't start out with just demanding performance until the person knows what the standards and expectations are," Prince said. "That's what we've been trying to weave into the fabric of our players, into their DNA, if you will.

"This is the favorite time of the year for coaches. (Practice) is when you actually get to sit down, without the crowd, without all the other things that have the players' attention and teach him that game as you want him to learn it and teach him how to relate to the other players on the field."

Prince said the hope is that phase two culminates on April 22 with the annual Purple-White Spring Game.

"It is very important for us to understand clearly what we're really here to do in spring football," Prince said. "How much we run and how much we pass and how much we blitz and how much we cover, all those things, obviously we'll know more about after April 22."

As the Wildcats set off on the path toward the 2006 season opener on Sept. 2 against Illinois State – a path that includes open practice for students, faculty and staff on Fridays and open practices on Saturdays – much of the focus will be on learning to adapt to a new coaching staff with new ideas and methods while trying to return to producing winning seasons.

Senior Dylan Meier, back from a shoulder injury and one of five quarterbacks expected to compete for the starting job, said a rebirth of the Wildcat football program starts with the new coaching staff and how players respond to the changes.

"It's all about that rebirth. Our main objective is obviously to win the Big 12. Whatever it takes in order for us to be reborn into that Big 12 Championship team, that's what we're going to do."

Thomas Clayton
RUNNING BACK

"It's a good different; it's a change of pace," Meier said. "It's a different energy and a new pulse rate. It was a change that was out of our hands, and as players, we go with it. Things in life get thrown at you, and you have to change to it. We as players, that's all we can do. We control what we can control."

Rain washes away possible title for Kern and golf team

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

How would it feel to be the leader of a golf tournament with three holes remaining in the final round, only to have the round cancelled?

"It made me pretty angry," senior Ben Kern said after leading down the stretch Tuesday in the Stevinson (Calif.) Ranch Invitational. "I was playing great. I know I was beating the other two guys who started the day ahead of me."

The whole tournament was played in rainy conditions, and the weather finally got the best of golfers toward the end of the final round.

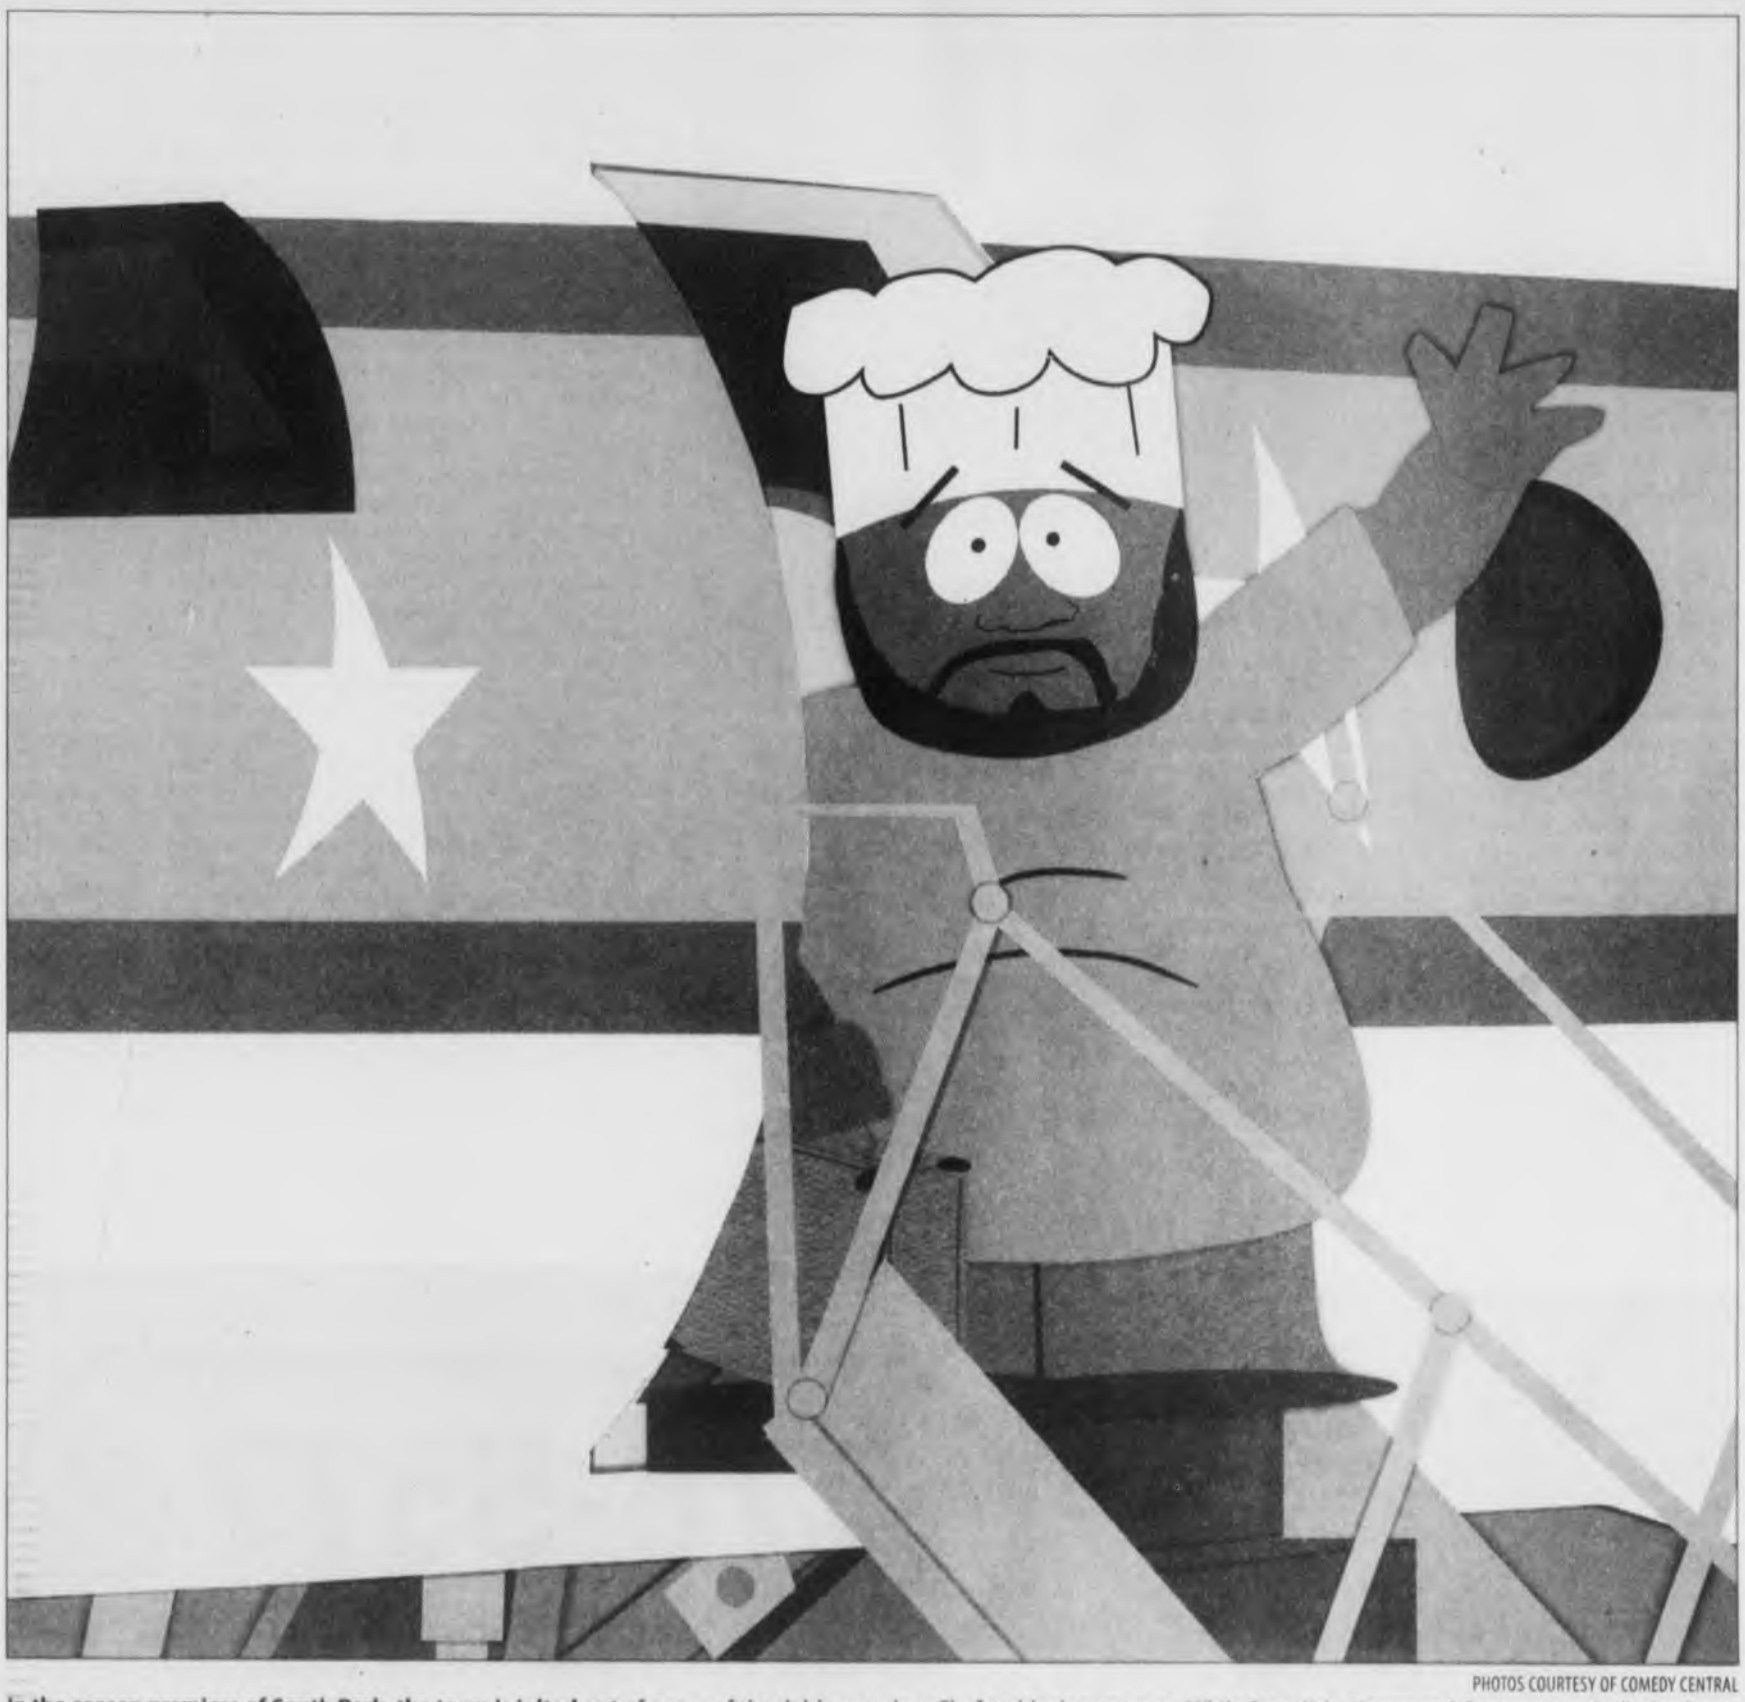
The tournament was suspended when heavy rain and lightning hit the Stevinson Ranch Golf Club, and after a few hours, tournament officials decided to cancel the event and use Monday's 36 holes as the final results.

Kern went into the final round and finished in third place after consecutive rounds of 73 to shoot a 2-over par 146.

Daniel Mitchell of Oklahoma City won the individual title with an even-par 144, and Drake's Ross Hamann took second with a 1-over 145.

K-State, as a team, finished in second place for the fourth consecutive year after shooting a 21-over 297, and coach Tim Norris said he wished the team had finished the last 18 holes, but said he is happy with where his team is in the season.

"Our guys had some pretty easy holes left, and you never know what could have happened in those final three holes," Norris said. "It was a tough day (Tuesday), and I was really proud of the guys.



"We played better golf this week than what we did in the last event, and hopefully we can keep that momentum going into our next event."

Host school Colorado won the tournament after besting the Wildcats by one shot, firing a 20-over 596.

Sophomore Kyle Yonke tied for 24th after shooting an 8-over 152. Senior Tyler Cummins tied for 32nd with a 9-over 153, and freshman Joe Kinney tied for 47th with a 13-over 157.

Senior Jonathan James played as an individual and ended the tournament tied for 16th with a 6-over 150.

South Park might have hit its peak, lost original appeal

"South Park"
TV series review by Loni Woolery

South Park has an important place in society. It tackles the hypocrisies in everyday life and has managed to stay popular since it first aired in 1997.

Call it a Comedy Central cash cow, but after the latest round of turmoil, it is time to start wondering if South Park is going to survive much longer.

South Park has been under a lot of scrutiny since it aired an episode last November that mocked Scientology, a religious movement that has attracted famous A-listers like Tom Cruise, John Travolta and South Park's own Isaac Hayes, the voice of Chef.

The episode, "Trapped in the Closet," was scheduled to rerun in mid-March but was pulled from the line-up at the last minute. Rumors surfaced reporting Cruise had threatened not to promote his latest film, "Mission Impossible 3," which is financed through the same corporation that runs Comedy Central, if the episode was aired again.

Around the same time, Hayes quit the show citing religious insensitivity.

The hypocrisy of it all is astounding.

Hayes was on board when South Park bashed Christianity and Judaism, but as soon as it attacked Scientology, he wanted to bail out.

However, leave it to Trey Parker and Matt Stone to get the last laugh about Hayes' sudden departure from the show.

The pair started off the show's 10th season by dedicating it to a horrifying turn of events. Chef was brainwashed by the "Super Adventure Club" into wanting to be a child molester. By the end of the episode, Chef was struck by lightning, burned, impaled on a stick, shot and mauled by a bear and mountain lion. He later is revived by the club, and returns as Darth Chef – perhaps a future villain on the show.

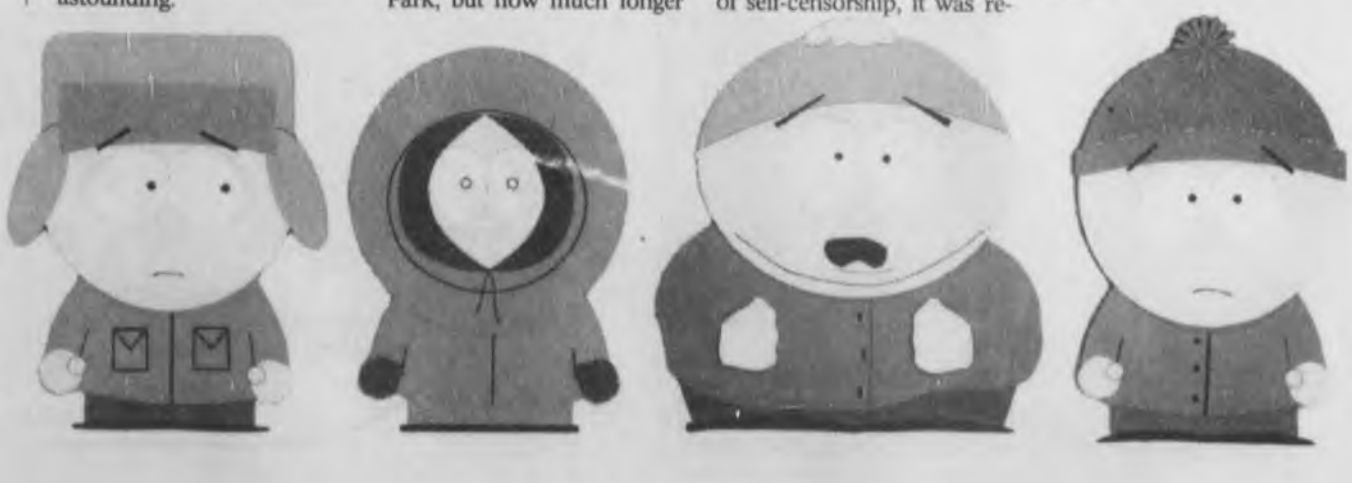
"We shouldn't be mad at Chef for leaving us," Kyle said in the episode. "We should be mad at that fruity little club for scrambling his brains."

According to the Associated Press, 3.5 million viewers tuned in despite the controversy.

It was South Park's highest rated season premiere since 2002.

The fans still love South Park, but how much longer can it last?

An episode titled "Trapped in the Closet" aired in November. It mocked Tom Cruise and Scientology. It eventually caused Isaac Hayes, the voice of Chef, to quit to show due to its religious insensitivity.



New episodes of South Park
When: 9 p.m. Wednesdays
TV station: Comedy Central

The original appeal of the show was its satirical views on sensitive subjects. In an entertainment industry that was concerned with not offending people to the point of self-censorship, it was refreshing to have a show that was willing to cross the line.

However, it has resorted to focusing episodes on a current political issue. There is no story line to follow, and the show has lost the appeal that drew in original viewers.

The new season has to return to its roots if it's going to make it to another season.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

Aries
(March 21 - April 19)
Good day to make a nice pot of gruel. Isn't it strange, how difficult it is these days to find gruel on the menu at restaurants? Perhaps you should start your own restaurant (e.g. The Gruel Pot) to rectify that situation.

Taurus
(April 20 - May 20)
Excellent day for light conversation. Good starting points might be "Have you ever thought much about death?" or "Where's the strangest place you ever had sex?"

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
Everyone who drives by today will stick their head out their car window, give you a big dopey look and flop their tongue around in the wind. If you had known this was "act like a dog" day, you might have been better prepared.

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
You may have to share a hotel room with a business colleague to save travel expenses. Here's a tip to keep them from talking all night: bring along a teddy bear and punch it really hard in the head a few times at bedtime, screaming "Shut up, Mr. Teddy! Shut up!"

Leo
(July 23 - Aug. 22)
You will find a renewed interest in home repair or remodeling soon. Oddly, that will occur shortly after a visit by your nephew.

Virgo
(Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
You will quit your job, run away from home, and spend the rest of your days working on a shrimp trawler under an assumed name. Personally, I think that's over-reacting.

Libra
(Sept. 22 - Oct. 22)
You will get through the day without too much trouble. It would go even more smoothly, however, if you had bought that laser cannon when you had the chance.

Scorpio
(Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
Good day to do crossword puzzles in the park. Life is short enough, without letting it get you all stressed out like that.

Sagittarius
(Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
You will combine a therapeutic technique based on rapid eye movement with yoga postures, creating something that looks so silly, passersby will actually fall over laughing.

Capricorn
(Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)
A swarm of rats will sneak up on you, and you will be suddenly engulfed in a squeaking, biting and torrent of rabid vermin. Oops! No, ha ha, looks like we forgot about the influence of Venus. Sorry. Hmmm. OK... actually, today you will have pizza.

Aquarius
(Jan. 21 - Feb. 18)
A man wearing two left shoes and a shirt with only one sleeve will approach you today and try to interest you in a no-load mutual fund. Trust him — he knows what he's doing.

Pisces
(Feb. 19 - March 20)
You've been getting tired of the same old "look" day after day. Maybe you should get a tattoo? I'll bet people with tattoos never get tired of 'em!

Public library provides more than books

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students can join book discussions, listen to talks on literary history or check out movies and music just by stopping at the local library.

Fred Atchison, director of the Manhattan Public Library, 629 Poyntz Ave., said the library offers a wide collection of music and other multimedia to the public.

"The library has a wonderful collection of DVDs and videos and CDs, which includes contemporary music," he said. "We have stuff that appeals to all ages."

The library facilitates free public Internet access, which Atchison said many community members use.

"We get a lot of folks who come in and use our technology center," he said. "A lot of people come and use our Internet access because it's easier to get in and out."

Atchison said nontraditional students with families can find services for children through the library's story time and reading program.

The library also provides book discussion groups, which Atchison said allow people to read and comment on popular literature. The library provides the books free to participants.

"We have a nice program of book discussion groups," Atchison said. "It has gotten more and more popular."

A book discussion about Henry James' book "Daisy Miller" will be at 7 p.m. Thursday in the second floor auditorium of the library. The Kansas Humanities Council and the Manhattan Library Association will sponsor the discussion.

A variety of public events and talks also are offered at the library, Atchison said.

An upcoming talk titled "Free Did Not Mean Welcome" will be presented by Carmaletta Williams, scholar from the University of Kansas, at 2 p.m. on Sunday in the second floor auditorium of the library.

Atchison said the library might not be as frequently visited by students as Hale Library, but services and collections are still available and numerous.

"We don't rival Hale with an academic collection," he said. "But we certainly supplement what's available at Hale."

Ashlea Vap, sophomore in family studies and human services, said she likes to visit the library for a quiet place to study.

While she said she hasn't had time to investigate all of the services provided, Vap said she has noticed a number of activities available for community members, especially for children.

"I think the public library is very reflective of the community, how it serves little kids and college students," Vap said.

Before taking home a new DVD or compact disc, Marilyn Fulkerson, circulation manager of the library, said a library card is required.

To obtain a library card, the library requires photo identification with a current address.

If a permanent address differs from a current residential address, Fulkerson said documentation with a name and current address must be provided on a piece of mail or receipt.

Three DVDs can be checked out for one week on each card. Two books on CD can be checked out for a three-week period, and five CDs also can be checked out on each card for three weeks.

Fulkerson said the library sees a lot of students who come to find books and use services.

"I think students that come from smaller towns who used the Dewey Decimal feel like it's easier to find things here than using the Library of Congress system at Hale," she said. "I think it's a little easier to find things."

For books, music and movies, Atchison said the library is a great stop for students to check out free material.

"When they're thinking about recreational reading or having fun with music selection, this is a good place to start your weekend," he said.

Meeting addresses underage drinking

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 30 community members gathered at the Houston Street Ballroom, 427 Houston St., Tuesday night for a town hall meeting on underage drinking.

The forum consisted of a video distributed by the federal government, a slide show discussing the effects of alcohol on adolescent brain development and a panel discussion.

"Alcohol use among people under 21 is the leading drug problem in the U.S., and a lot of people don't consider it a drug," said Larry George, chair of the Manhattan Area Risk Prevention Coalition.

"Every day, 5,400 young people under the age of 16 take their first drink. At least three teens die from drinking and driving every day."

A 2005 national study reported more than 60 percent of eighth graders had consumed alcohol, and about one-third of eighth graders consume alcohol at least monthly, George said.

"The bottom line is, we have way too many kids drinking way too much and causing too many tragedies for themselves and others," George said. "That's why we're here tonight, to figure this out and make Manhattan a safer community."

Tuesday's forum was part of the national initiative to reduce underage drinking. The initiative began in November 2005 and called for several hundred districts nationwide to have informational meetings.

These districts were selected based on recent data about underage drinking, and each received a $1,000 stipend to have the required March 28 meeting, said Starla Bacanegra, director of the Regional Prevention Center of Northeast Kansas.

Psychological effects of underage drinking also were discussed. Research proves young brains are not fully developed until age 24, and the prefrontal cortex of the brain is the last to develop.

As this part of the brain controls judgment and inhibitions, underage drinking causes psychological impairment, Melissa Graf, community consultant, said.

Local statistics also were given at the meeting. Riley County youth typically begin drinking at 14 1/2 years old, consistent with the state average, according to 2004 data on the Communities That Care Web site.

When compared to other data, K-State's numbers were down in several categories.

According to K-State surveys, most students consumed alcohol for the first time at 15 1/2 years old, said Bill Arck, director of K-State's Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service.

About 20 percent of K-State students do not drink, and K-State students account for only about 100 of Riley County's 600 annual DUIs, Arck said.

Bush taps Bolten for chief of staff

By Terence Hunt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Struggling to revive his troubled presidency, President Bush replaced longtime chief of staff Andy Card with budget director Joshua Bolten on Tuesday and gave Bolten authority to make further changes in a White House staff that even Republicans have complained is tired, insular and lacking fresh ideas.

Appearing with Bush in the Oval Office, Bolten gave no hint about what, if any, shakeup he might order. But White House officials said no one should doubt his ability to replace Bush aides.

"He'll have all the authority he needs ... to make the decisions that he feels best, working with the president," White House spokesman Scott McClellan said.

Like Card, Bolten, 51, is a Washington insider whose ties reach back to Bush's 2000 campaign for the White House.

Democrats – as well as some Republicans – grumbled that the new White House boss looked a lot like the old one.

Bush said of Bolten, "He's a man of candor and humor and directness, who's comfortable with responsibility and knows how to lead. No person is better prepared for this important position."

Before being named budget director in 2003, Bolten was Card's deputy chief of staff for policy, a colleague of such senior aides as Karl Rove and Dan Bartlett.

Alarmed by Bush's falling approval ratings and White House mistakes – from the bungled Hurricane Katrina response to the ill-fated deal to allow an Arab company to manage U.S. ports – Republicans have been urging the president to bring in new advisers with fresh energy.

The GOP's concerns have been heightened by anxiety over midterm congressional elections in November. Card, as chief of staff, became a target for blame.

Democrats said Card's departure wasn't enough. "Simply rearranging the deck chairs on the Titanic by replacing Andy Card with Josh Bolten, without a dramatic change in policy, will not right this ship," said Sen. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y.

Said Democratic National Committee communications director Karen Finney:

"As the saying goes, you can put lipstick on a pig, but it's still a pig. Unfortunately for the American people, all President Bush did today was make it clear that they should expect nothing more than the same failed policies they have come to know all too well."

Once believed to harbor ambitions of surpassing Sherman Adams' nearly six-year record as the longest serving chief of staff – under Dwight Eisenhower – Card told Bush on March 8 he thought he should leave, McClellan said. Bush decided over the weekend at Camp David to accept the resignation and replace Card with Bolten, the spokesman said.

"Ecclesiastes reminds us that there are different seasons, and there is a new season," said Card, whose wife is a Methodist minister.

To the public, Card might be best known as the aide who calmly walked into a Florida classroom and whispered to Bush that America was under attack on Sept. 11, 2001.

A veteran of every Republican administration back to Ronald Reagan's, Card is respected in Washington as fair, smart and hardworking – the first to arrive at the White House around 5:30 a.m. and often the last to leave at night.

Card, 58, stood stoically with his hands by his sides as Bush lauded his years of service. Then, gripping the podium, Card said in his farewell: "You're a good man, Mr. President."

Card's eyes were watery. He said he looked forward to just being Bush's friend. Bush then gave him five quick slaps on the back, and the two walked out of the Oval Office together.

"Andy Card, a longtime friend of mine, is tired. That he stayed in this job this long shows how much he cares about this country," Sen. George Voinovich, R-Ohio, told reporters later.

As chief of staff, Bolten will regulate the paper flow to Bush's desk, oversee his schedule and determine who gets in to see the president – although some longtime aides have unquestioned access.

Bolten was budget chief when the government ran its three largest deficits ever, including the record $413 billion shortfall in 2004 – though most of that was because of the economy and years of decision-making by presidents and lawmakers.

"Josh Bolten has a record of failure," said Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev. "Look at what he's done with our national debt."

But Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said Bush made a wise decision in picking Bolten.

"His reputation among Democrats and Republicans alike is being a tough-minded, skilled conservative but also has an ability to work with Congress, work with Democrats as well as Republicans."

Rejecting charges of staff inertia, McClellan said half of Bush's senior aides have been replaced since the president's re-election in 2004. But some in Bush's inner circle – such as Texans Rove, Bartlett, Harriet Miers and McClellan himself – remain at the White House after 5 1/2 years.

Remains found at trade center site

By Amy Westfeldt
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK – Construction workers cleaning toxic waste from a vacant skyscraper near the World Trade Center site have found more bone fragments and human remains, officials said Tuesday.

The city medical examiner's office plans to extract DNA from the latest remains to be recovered from the former Deutsche Bank building and try to match it against a database of the 2,749 people killed at the trade center on Sept. 11, 2001, said Ellen Borakove, spokeswoman for the city medical examiner's office.

Fire Department crews previously searched the building, and 10 bone fragments were found on the roof last fall.

The new remains were found in recent weeks by crews doing a more thorough cleaning before construction workers begin dismantling the building in May, said John Gallagher, spokesman for the Lower Manhattan Development Corp.

Some victims' family members said forensic experts should search the 41-story building again.

"I'm not trying to malign the construction workers, but this is not what they're trained to do," said Diane Horning, whose son was killed at the trade center and has filed suit to remove trade center debris from a landfill where victims' remains were found.

The medical examiner's office is storing more than 9,000 unidentified remains and hopes that more sophisticated DNA technology can allow for identifications in the future.

Borakove said two human remains were found Jan. 27 on the 38th floor of the building.

She could not say what the remains were or how big they were. Last Friday, workers found two bone fragments on the roof, she said.

"They are definitely human," Borakove said.

The Deutsche Bank building has been vacant since the terrorist attacks, when part of the south tower tore a gash in the building.

Deconstruction of the building, which is contaminated with asbestos, lead and trade center dust, began in September.

Reagan cabinet officer Weinberger dies at 88

By Elizabeth White
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Caspar W. Weinberger, who oversaw the Pentagon's biggest peacetime spending increase as President Reagan's defense secretary and later was indicted for his role in the Iran-Contra affair, died Tuesday. He was 88.

Weinberger had been hospitalized in Bangor, Maine, with a high fever and pneumonia brought on by his age, according to his son, Caspar Weinberger Jr.

President Bush called him "an American statesman and a dedicated public servant" who strengthened the military and helped end the Cold War. "This good man made many contributions to our nation," the president said in a statement.

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said, "He left the U.S. armed forces stronger, our country safer and the world more free."

Weinberger served as President Nixon's budget director and was given the nickname "Cap the Knife" for his efforts to slash government spending. Yet Weinberger's best-known role might have been as Reagan's defense secretary, when the classic cold warrior presided over a cumulative $2 trillion in military spending.

Determined to ensure U.S. strategic strength to counter the Soviet Union, Weinberger pushed Congress to fund such programs as the Strategic Defense Initiative, Midgetman and MX missiles, B-1B bombers and stealth aircraft.

But it also was during this time that reports surfaced of excesses at the Pentagon, from $600 toilet seats to $400 hammers. Cartoonists had a field day portraying Weinberger with toilet seats around his neck.

In a Feb. 10, 1986, interview with The Washington Post, Reagan defended his defense secretary: "That's the same price that TWA and Delta and United pay. It is a molded cover for the entire toilet system. And, yes, it does cost about that much."

"His legacy is a strong and free America, and for this and for a lifetime of selfless service, a grateful nation thanks him," former first lady Nancy Reagan said Tuesday.

A lifelong Republican, Weinberger's early interest in politics and government – sparked by his father, a lawyer – led him to the Pentagon and White House.

But his work also led to trouble – federal felony charges stemming from his alleged role in the sale of weapons to Iran to finance secret, illegal aid to the Nicaraguan Contras.

The "arms-for-hostages" affair poisoned the closing years of Reagan's administration and permanently stained the reputations of the insiders involved.

In one of the first President Bush's final official acts after his 1992 loss to Bill Clinton, he granted Christmas Eve pardons to Weinberger and five others accused in the affair. Bush was Reagan's vice president.

Weinberger, 75 at the time, had been scheduled to stand trial in less than two weeks on charges that he concealed thousands of pages of his handwritten notes from congressional investigators and prosecutors.

He'd earlier rejected independent counsel Lawrence Walsh's plea-bargain offer to testify against his longtime friends and colleagues – including Reagan – and plead guilty to a misdemeanor.

Weinberger had said he was innocent of all charges and considered the indictment a political attack.

After the pardon was announced, Walsh alleged that "the Iran-Contra cover-up, which has continued for more than six years, has now been completed."

Weinberger's son said Tuesday, "My father was just a world diplomat, a No. 1 great American patriot. He always stayed the course. He always had beliefs; he held to those beliefs."

In 1989, Weinberger, a self-described "frustrated newspaperman" – he was president of the Harvard Crimson – joined Forbes to become the magazine's fourth publisher. In 1993 he was named chairman of Forbes, Inc.

Besides his son, Weinberger is survived by a daughter, Arlin Weinberger, and his wife of 63 years, Jane. All three were at his bedside when he died.

A statement from Weinberger's family said funeral arrangements at Arlington National Cemetery are pending.

Pizza Hut franchisee agrees to renovate

By Sam Hananel
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The nation's largest Pizza Hut franchisee has agreed to renovate hundreds of restaurants to settle claims they are inaccessible to the disabled, the Justice Department announced Tuesday.

NPC International Inc., which has executive offices in Lenexa, Kan., and its restaurant services center in Pittsburg, Kan., reached the settlement to resolve alleged violations of the Americans with Disabilities Act.

The agreement requires restaurants to repair parking lots, seating areas, bathrooms and self-service counters to bring them into compliance.

The company, which operates about 800 restaurants in 25 states, did not admit any violations of federal law and reached the settlement to avoid potential litigation, according to a copy of the settlement agreement.

"Too often, the ease and enjoyment of restaurant dining is not a reality for individuals with disabilities," said Wan J. Kim, assistant attorney general for the department's Civil Rights Division. "I commend NPC for their commitment to take the steps necessary to make its Pizza Hut restaurants accessible."

Under the settlement, NPC must alter or remodel all the Pizza Hut restaurants it owns to make them comply with the ADA and train all its employees and store managers on how to operate under the law.

NPC also must work with landlords at the 180 delivery and carryout restaurants it does not own to ensure they are accessible to disabled patrons.

The Justice Department discovered the violations during a compliance review prompted by complaints from private citizens in the Midwest, department spokesman Eric Holland said.

All improvements must be completed during a timetable that spans the next four years.

Earlier this month, NPC was sold to the private equity arm of Merrill Lynch & Co. Pizza Hut Inc. is a unit of Yum Brands Inc.

Drug company settles Paxil case

By Dan Robrish
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

PHILADELPHIA – The maker of the antidepressant Paxil agreed to pay $14 million to state drug-purchasing programs to settle allegations that it blocked generic versions of the drug from being made, causing the states to pay higher prices.

A spokeswoman for GlaxoSmithKline said the company denied any wrongdoing and was not admitting liability in making the settlement, which mostly affects Medicaid programs.

"We made the decision that settling was appropriate to avoid the expense and distraction of protracted litigation," company spokeswoman Gaile Renegar said.

The states, including Kansas and Missouri, had alleged that GlaxoSmithKline used frivolous patent-infringement lawsuits against generic drug makers, triggering automatic extensions of the patent for Paxil.

That delayed the introduction of generic versions of the drug, resulting in higher prices both for state drug programs and the general public, according to the attorneys general who won the settlement filed Tuesday in federal court in Philadelphia.

"GSK used the courts to hold onto a monopoly for a popular drug, and the end result was that consumers – including Medicaid – paid more than they should have," Missouri Attorney General Jay Nixon said in a statement released by his office. "This settlement demonstrates that we won't allow pharmaceutical companies to be rewarded for actions that penalize consumers."

Critics call the patent extension "evergreening," but drug makers contend that it is a legitimate protection of the fruits of costly research.

A class-action lawsuit by users of Paxil in a Pennsylvania case was previously settled, but that settlement excluded government programs, according to Nixon's office.

New York State Attorney General Eliot Spitzer, whose office led the negotiations along with the Maryland attorney general's office, said the settlement was agreed to by the attorneys general of every state except West Virginia.

Stadium backers spend $1.3 million before vote

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Backers of a Jackson County election to fund millions of dollars in stadium improvements at the Truman Sports Complex might have a tough fight ahead at the polls.

But they have come out ahead in one area: campaign spending.

Supporters of the April 4 ballot measures – one for stadium improvements and one for a rolling roof that would land Kansas City the 2015 Super Bowl – have raised $1.55 million and spent $1.3 million in advance of the April 4 election.

Opponents have spent $501, according to the latest campaign finance reports filed with the Missouri Ethics Commission.

That's a 2,613-to-1 spending advantage for the Save Our Stadiums campaign, which dominates the television airwaves with pleas to "save our teams." But opponents say their Internet efforts are leveling the field.

"I don't know if we'll win or lose, but we have all these alternative sources of information on our side, and that makes this election different," said Terrence Nash, whose Neighborhood Action Group of Kansas City opposes the measures.

"They have given us an opportunity to spread the word," he said. "People's e-mail boxes are virgin territory, and to me, it's the best direct-marketing tool ever."

The campaign reports do not take into account anti-proposal Web sites or the time and money put into opponents' e-mail campaigns.

The NFL's Kansas City Chiefs and baseball's Kansas City Royals have been the biggest donors to the pro-stadium campaigns, with the Royals giving $600,000 and the Chiefs $800,000.

Heavy Constructors Association and the Greater Kansas City Chamber of Commerce each gave $50,000.

Pat Gray, a strategist for the pro-stadium campaign, said polls show that the media blitz is beginning to sway voters.

Wamego, Kan., areas for more than 25 years and has 87 current volunteers.

Nolte said Homecare and Hospice also has clients who are not terminally diagnosed. Students can volunteer for these clients if they are not comfortable with volunteering with a hospice, she said.

While volunteering is open to all academic majors, Nolte said it is suggested for those interested in social work, medical professions and psychology.

"It's not limited, because volunteer experience is good for someone in any major," she said.

Nolte said students who volunteer will gain an understanding of what hospice is.

"A lot of people think hospice is depressing and about dying, but it's really not," she said. "It's about celebrating life and taking the end of your life and living it to the fullest, and you get to see some people who really have a focus on what life is really about."

Kathy Morehead, clinical coordinator for Homecare and Hospice, said volunteers can gain self-satisfaction in helping those in the last stages of life.

"Student volunteers will appreciate how to deal with older people and learn what they have to teach," Morehead said.

Bill Peterson, executive director of Homecare and Hospice, said volunteering for hospice clients is a good experience for students.

"It's a real good experience for them to experience a different type of volunteerism than they've done before," he said. "Young people bring a fresh and energetic experience to an organization."

OVERTIME | Dietz's steal, free throw win game

Invitation Tournament Championship game.

"I just knew we needed a defensive stop," Dietz said. "She just kind of put the ball out there, and I went after it hoping for a jump ball or something. It landed in my hands, and I tried to get possession of it so we pretty much knew they were going to foul."

Throughout the game, K-State had significant troubles from the charity stripe. The Wildcats had 20 chances from the free-throw line but only were able to sink nine of the shots.

"It was just absolutely ridiculous," Coggins said of the free-throw situation. "Our whole team couldn't put a free throw in. Dietz did a great job getting a steal for the game and making that loose ball hers. It was just an ugly game on every single aspect."

Dietz made one free throw and missed the other during her trip to the line in overtime. However, that one point proved to be the difference as the Lady Toppers, down by three, only managed to score a two-point basket on their last possession.

"When she fouled me, I kept telling myself, 'Put these free throws in; we need them,'" Dietz said. "I just tried to have as much confidence as I could in myself."

Police said 1,055,000 people took part in more than 250 protests nationwide, including 92,000 in Paris. The organizers' total was closer to 3 million, with 700,000 at the march from the Left Bank to the heavily policed Place de Republique.

Elsewhere, 31,000 marched in the southwestern city of Bordeaux, 28,000 in the southern port of Marseille, 26,000 in the Alpine city of Grenoble, 17,000 in Lyon and hundreds of thousands in dozens of other cities and towns, according to police.

Riot police, under orders to arrest as many troublemakers as possible, moved aggressively in Paris to prevent a repeat of the intense violence of past demonstrations.

Marchers ranged across all age groups, from students with "Non" painted on their faces, to older union militants. Many said they wanted to defend the status quo.

"Young people are sacrificed in the name of the economy, and we are here to fight against it," said Maxime Ourly, 18, a literature student at the Paris march. "We don't know what will happen in the future, and we want to control our futures."

Students and labor unions say the labor law will erode France's cherished workplace protections. Set to take effect next month, it would let companies fire employees under 26 without reason in the first two years on the job.

Villepin told parliament that he was open to talks on employment and possible changes to the law but did not say that he would withdraw it.

"Only in action will we convince all of the French that tomorrow can be better than today," he said, loudly heckled by opposition politicians.

Villepin says the greater flexibility will encourage companies to hire young workers, who face a 22 percent unemployment rate – the highest in Western Europe.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Kimberly Dietz hugs Claire Coggins on Tuesday evening after K-State's 57-56 win over Western Kentucky in the Women's National Invitation Tournament. The Wildcats' win over the Lady Toppers moves them into the championship game of the tournament, which will be played at 7 p.m. Friday.

WNIT | Wildcats beat Toppers by 1 in final minutes minutes before returning, but shot just 3-of-8 from the floor in the first half.

"I didn't want this to be our or my last game, and I wanted to at least try and come out do something positive," said Coggins, who finished with a team-high 16 points.

In the second half, K-State ignited the Bramlage crowd with a 10-3 run to open the half and take a 34-27 lead with 15:30 remaining.

K-State and Western Kentucky would trade leads the rest of the way until Brianne Brown nailed a 3-pointer for Western Kentucky with 27 seconds left in regulation to knot the game at 53-53.

On K-State's next possession, Coggins drove through the lane and was fouled with eight seconds left, setting up potential game-winning free throws. Coggins missed both, and K-State went to its fifth overtime game of the season.

Even though K-State was 0-4 in overtime games, Coggins said the Wildcats weren't thinking about the past.

"In the last six or seven games of our season, heading into the WNIT, the maturity of this team has gotten so much better," Coggins said. "We're not bothered by anything that has happened in the past. We were bothered by what we had done in regulation, but we kept sticking it out."

K-State also took advantage of 28 Western Kentucky turnovers, scoring 23 points off Lady Topper mistakes. Freshman JoAnn Hamlin added 15 points on 7-of-11 shooting, and freshman Shalee Lehning chipped in by grabbing 10 rebounds and recording four steals.

Patterson said nothing was easy for the Wildcats on Tuesday night.

"It was just one of those games where both teams were battling as hard as they could, every single possession," Patterson said. "Down the stretch, it was going to be the difference in one mistake, one big play, and we were fortunate in that."

QUARTERBACK | Competition for position stays friendly, fierce

2004 with five starts. He finished second on the team with 418 yards rushing.

Senior Dylan Meier will return from a season-long injury. Meier, who suffered from a severe shoulder injury, said he is looking forward to the opportunity to compete for the job and is excited to be able to play again.

"I'm full go, 100 percent," Meier said. "It's been awhile, and I definitely have to shake some rust off.

"The competition is going to bring out the best in us all, and it's going to make each one of us better, which will make the whole team better."

Meier was labeled by Street & Smith's as the Big 12 Conference's best passing quarterback heading into the 2005 season after he threw for 1,436 yards and nine touchdowns while starting only six games in 2004.

True freshman Josh Freeman comes in as the No. 4-rated dual-threat quarterback in the country by Rivals.com. Freeman is expected to provide more competition for the starting job.

Freeman passed for more than 7,000 yards as a prep at Grandview High School in Missouri and threw for 33 touchdowns in his senior season.

Lopina passed for nearly 1,400 yards and 14 touchdowns as a senior at De La Salle High School in Pleasanton, Calif. He said he doesn't feel like he is competing for a starting job as much as he is having a friendly competition while trying to make everyone better.

"You could say it's a competition, but we are all friends, and we help each other out," Lopina said. "We are all learning a new offense, and everyone is on a clean slate.

"Everyone has a shot at playing time this year, including myself. It's just going to come down to who can learn the offense the fastest, who's putting all the effort in, who's coming in and watching film, and that's really what it's going to come down to."

Safe Shelter?

With tornado season on the way, students can learn common safety procedures

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kansas isn't known for a movie about a giant tornado for no reason. Located in the heart of the Midwest, Kansas also is part of another region – "Tornado alley." According to www.tornadochaser.net, tornado alley consists of those states which consistently record multiple tornado touchdowns in a year. The Web site also lists Kansas as the state that has experienced the highest number of F5 (the most destructive) tornadoes since 1880.

The Fujita Scale is used to measure the intensity, or destructive power, of tornadoes, according to the site. The lowest rating on the scale is an F0, which has estimated wind speeds of 40-70 miles per hour. An F5 can have estimated wind speeds of 261-318 miles per hour, which could pick up a house and carry it a considerable distance.

Mary Knapp, climatologist in the Department of Agronomy, said the tornado season will be here soon.

"Primarily, (the season) is during April, May and June," Knapp said. "(Tornadoes) can happen any time though; they're just more prevalent during those months. May is the peak month."

Knapp said it's important for students and community members to know what to do in case of severe weather and to have a plan of action should they be in the possible path of a tornado.

"There's a couple of things they want to look at, that they have some way of getting the alert," she said. "One of the things they can do is if they're online, there's a number of different systems they can check; if they've got a weather radio in their dorm (room), that's another way."

Besides having a way to hear about severe weather, Knapp said students should also know in advance how they can take shelter, which can vary depending on where they live.

HOUSES

For those who live in a house, Knapp said the best recommendation is to get to the lowest level and to put as many walls between yourself and the tornado as possible.

"Avoid expansive roofs and windows," she said.

She explained that roofs can cave in during a tornado, and windows are the easiest inlet for debris. She said bathrooms, closets and hallways are good choices for shelter.

Bathrooms, she explained, are more stable, because the plumbing often is anchored into the home's foundation.

"And you want to be on the lowest level, because a major storm can strip a house down to the foundation," she said.

RESIDENCE HALLS

For students living on campus, the staff in the residence halls are there to guide them to shelter during a severe weather situation.

Jayme Uden, residence life coordinator of Moore Hall, said the staff tells the residents to go down to the third floor or lower and to stay away from windows.

Many students, he said, choose to go down to the basement.

"These high rises over on the Derby side, which includes Moore, Haymaker and Ford, are designed to break off on the fourth floor – which, that would take pretty severe weather," Uden said.

He said students are notified through sirens, like a fire alarm, and said the staff in Moore can hear reports of a severe weather situation through a weather radio. The campus police also helps keep them informed, he said.

"(They're) really good about notifying us about situations like that in advance," he said.

Alleged rape leads to arrest

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kyle Roggenkamp, 621 N. 6th St., was arrested on Tuesday for a warrant issued by the Riley County District Court for an alleged rape in February.

Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said the case was an isolated incident.

The alleged victim was under the influence of alcohol and unable to consent or resist according to reports, he said.

Roggenkamp's bond was set at $10,000.

Taxpayers alerted to rise in identity theft scams

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Internal Revenue Service has raised alerts about theft scams seeking to obtain personal financial information for taxpayers through e-mail, according to a March 14 article in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

According to the article, the IRS and Treasury Department have noticed an increase of phishing scams this winter. These scams are defined as the impersonation of official government agencies, banks or institutions to take personal information, including account numbers, passwords or credit card numbers from taxpayers.

Joni McCourtney, office manager at H & R Block in Salina, Kan., said H & R Block received an alert early in the year about a rise in theft scams online.

"They actually have a Web site page that looks very similar to the actual IRS Web site," McCourtney said. "They're sending an e-mail to go to this site."

If e-mails are received claiming to be from the IRS, McCourtney said they most likely are not from the government, especially if the e-mail requests personal information.

"Of course, we're in a business where client confidentiality is extremely important," McCourtney said. "We do not send anything without their consent."

The government alerted H & R Block last year of some of these scams, but McCourtney said they have targeted the online scam more recently.

"There have always been one type of scam or another for a number of years," she said. "They're really hitting on it this year because it's a new thing to zero in on."

Although theft scams might change over the years with changes in technology, McCourtney said keeping one's identity safe is vital.

"I don't know how to instill to people the need to be careful with personal information," she said.

T.J. Atwood, associate professor in accounting, said the IRS never e-mails people to ask them to disclose personal information for any reason.

"People should know the IRS would never e-mail you and ask for your social security number or information," Atwood said. "The IRS will not e-mail taxpayers to ask for information."

If taxpayers file electronically, Atwood said a confirmation e-mail is sent, but the e-mail will not ask for information.

"But if you have any questions, dial the 800 number and ask," she said.

Roger Seiler, senior in accounting, said if he received an e-mail from a group trying to get his personal information, he would probably delete it.

"I would be skeptical of it because it wanted my information over the Internet," Seiler said.

Manhattan couple completes 5 'Amazing Race' episodes

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Watch "The Amazing Race"
9 p.m. CST Tuesdays on CBS

A couple from Manhattan, Lori Willems and Dave Spiker, have survived five episodes of the Emmy-winning show "The Amazing Race."

The ninth season of "The Amazing Race" premiered on Feb. 28. The show consists of several teams of two with a pre-existing relationship, who fly to destinations around the world and, while in those countries, perform tasks common for that area, according to the CBS Web site.

The tasks consist of either Detours, where the couple can pick between two different tasks, or Roadblocks, where one person must complete the task before the team can move on.

The fifth episode, which aired Tuesday, had the teams fly 850 miles to Palermo, Italy, on the island of Sicily. They went to the Teatro Massimo, a 100-year-old opera house, to find their clue, which told them to drive 42 miles to Castellammare.

There they found a Detour. Either they could transport a 110-pound church bell on a vehicle known as an Ape, or they could search 2,400 pieces of laundry to find one of 16 items with a yellow and red tag.

Willems and Spiker chose the laundry and went to the Teatro di Segesta in Segesta, Italy, where they had to piece together a 3-D puzzle of a classical Greek statue. After Lori completed the statue, they ran to the nearby Teatro, finishing in sixth place.

This season opened in Denver, and since then the pairs have traveled to Sao Paulo, Brazil; Brotas, Brazil; Moscow; Frankfurt, Germany; and Munich, Germany. The teams have traveled more than 14,000 miles.

While Willems and Spiker are not allowed to discuss the show until it has finished airing, they and the show have fans at K-State who watch and are rooting for them.

Sarah Beck, freshman in open option, said although she watched the show before Willems and Spiker began competing, she still cheers for them.

"I like some of the other teams too, but it piqued my interest when I realized that they were on there," she said.

Beck said she likes several different aspects of the show.

"I like the crazy Roadblocks and the challenges," she said. "The fact that they build up the drama, and you can't tell the time between the

TO THE POINT

Residents need to be aware of tornado safety

It's no secret we sit in the middle of "Tornado alley," and every year during the months of April, May and June, even the smallest thunderstorms can quickly turn into ferocious tornadoes without warning.

Although many cities have sirens in place to warn residents of possible tornadoes, the sirens don't always give people enough warning to take shelter.

Students and residents should take it upon themselves to know where to go and what to do in case of a tornado.

No matter where a person might be when a tornado hits, there are places and procedures for almost any situation. People should take the time to research where the safest places are to go if they live in a house, apartment building, mobile home or residence hall. Many apartment complexes, resident halls and public buildings have posted tornado procedures and should be checked from time to time so one can find the quickest shelter in case of a tornado.

Residents also should arm themselves with the latest information during a severe storm by using a weather radio or a battery-powered radio to stay informed of any tornado developments.

Although the tornado season is around the corner, tornadoes can strike without warning at any time, and citizens should be aware of the safety precautions they can take to protect themselves in the event of a tornado.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Protect and serve

Officers' dedication, compassion deserve respect

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

My first encounter with a police officer was when I was about 5 years old. The town I lived in was small, and Deputy McDaniels often drove down the street and talked to the kids.

I had a bike my dad built for me, and it got stolen. He made it out of spare parts, and it was purple, which I loved. When it was stolen, I was devastated.

Sometime later, the deputy stopped by and said he had seen a bike matching the description of mine in a yard in Garden City, Kan., which was six or so miles away. He and Dad went, identified it and brought it back to me.

It occurs to me now how remarkable this was. It was a kid's bike and not important in any way to any person but me. I'm sure the deputy had more important things to do than look for a purple bike belonging to a strange little girl.

So, I'm predisposed to like cops.

I like their sense of humor, their dedication to the job and the genuine concern I see when they deal with people.

So when I see people interact with the K-State Police or Riley County Police Department officers, it never ceases to amaze me how many people mistrust or downright hate them.

And it isn't just them, it's all police. When I lived in Missouri, I saw the same response.

I've seen officers express genuine concern about someone's welfare only to be cursed at.

The cops I have met are good people, and that is the thing to remember: they are people. They get tired and have concerns and families, just like everyone else. They experience boredom when nothing is happening, then suddenly there is a wreck or a shooting or just some drunks fighting in Aggieville, and all hell breaks loose.

The difference is they can't be tired or sad or angry, because they serve and protect people.

When they try to protect, they are shot. When they try to serve, they get thrown up on.

And they are expected to take it and not respond, because it's part of the job.

A job in which they are woefully underpaid, understaffed and ill-equipped.

I'm still predisposed to like cops.

But I would never be one. I couldn't pass the physical, for one, and I doubt if anyone in their right mind would let me carry a gun.

It's too hard. Wearing a mask all the time to hide your emotions has to take a toll, and being perfect is a standard I could never attain.

Yet nothing less is expected from police officers. They are expected to enter situations any sane person would run screaming from.

God help them if pulling a dying dog off the road upsets them in any way, or if trying to help someone out of a domestic abuse situation results in the victim accusing them of hurting the abuser.

It's just part of the job.

A job you couldn't pay me enough to do.

I'd lose my sense of humor way too fast.

Conflict resolution should use words, not war

ZACHARY ECKELS

People who know me know I am full of beliefs that are out of the ordinary. I've always been taught to question everything that surrounds me, so I always go out of my way to see what I think, not what I'm told to think.

There is, however, one of my beliefs in particular that always seems to get that stamp of a confused look on the faces of people to whom I try to explain it. Even most of my closest friends tend to let my words travel through one ear and out the other, ignoring that they're friends with someone who could believe such things.

I believe in pacifism.

That's right, I actually believe all the disputes in our world can and should be taken care of peacefully. And that there's absolutely no need to be spending $441.6 billion this year, according to www.globalissues.org, on the war machine.

If I've angered you by this point, I'm guessing you think a lot more people would be killed by dictators if we weren't out in the world killing their soldiers. But before you can be positive that war is really the answer, it's important to first understand what war is.

A book that is widely thought of as one of the most influential in explaining war in Western history is "On War," by Carl Von Clausewitz. In it, Clausewitz explains that war is just an extension of politics.

Basically, if country A doesn't like the politics of country B, it will first talk, then impose sanctions and finally, if the problem still is large enough, begin a war with country B.

If both countries continue to talk and make compromises, no soldiers will need to die. And, if soldiers' lives aren't enough, this option will make both countries better off, as they won't have to drain all of their resources for a war.

Americans already have proved that we can resolve things peacefully.

One of our greatest movements in United States history was led with the call for peace. The entire country recognized the evil it was allowing and started down the path of change, inspired by the words and actions of Martin Luther King Jr. and his supporters.

We also can continue to teach the citizens, who are being oppressed, how to overthrow their government through nonviolent groups.

With such help, citizens were able to get rid of Slobodan Milosevic, a dictator that ruled Serbia from 1989 to 2000. Although Milosevic held the country's media and soldiers in a firm grip, the people opposed him with nonviolent tactics. According to www.canvasopedia.org, they protested in the streets and covered surfaces around the country with stickers stating, "He's finished."

Finally, the country went on a large strike beginning with the coal miners' strike, and the country came to a halt. Milosevic's soldiers saw, recognized and ignored their orders. They knew how strong the will of the people was and refused to kill the innocent protesters. Milosevic realized he had lost all power and stepped down. Six months later, he was arrested by Serbian police.

This was just one of the many instances in which nonviolence has worked to resolve conflict in the world. There always are going to be ways to change without resorting to senseless violence. It is not necessary for men to kill and die to stand up for the beliefs of those in power.

Given enough time, words will always prevail and the conclusion will be better.

Recently, my parents told me they heard a good quotation while watching "Criminal Minds." The quotation was from Mahatma Gandhi and was my inspiration in writing this column: "I object to violence because when it appears to do good, the good is only temporary; the evil it does is permanent."

Panel shares privileges, oppression in forum

To begin the "Privilege In Our Society" forum, audience members and panelists participate in a game to illustrate things that provide privilege or oppression in daily life. The forum incorporated four speakers and Megan Challender, senior in political science, the coordinator of the event.

The Season for Nonviolence is coming to an end.

A forum, "Privilege In Our Society," took place Wednesday afternoon in the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union. A panel discussed privilege relating to race, gender, class, sexual orientation and more with audience participation.

The panel consisted of Challender; Christopher Renner, program assistant for the dean of the College of Education; Sompathana Phitsanoukanh, senior in women's studies; Mary Stolz, senior in mass communications; and Mei Thandayuthapani, graduate student in software engineering.

Challender discussed her privilege as a white, straight female and said privilege is unearned power.

"It's something given to you in a society," Challender said. "As a white person, I was born with a privilege that will never go away."

She also said her oppression comes from being female. When the first of her two homosexual sisters came out, she realized her privilege as a heterosexual.

"Privilege and oppression work together," Challender said. "Privilege is multidimensional. Understanding my privilege is just as important as understanding my oppression."

Renner discussed his privilege as a white male, his oppression as a child in poverty, and his oppression from being a homosexual.

"I was informed at a fairly early age by my classmates that I was a sissy, so I couldn't show affection to the ones I loved," Renner said.

He said he moved to another country for 18 years where sexual orientation was not an issue.

Phitsanoukanh is from Vietnam and has lived in the United States since the 1980s. She told her story of adjusting during high school and helping her father and her mother, who cannot speak English.

"I had to adopt many Christian aspects," Phitsanoukanh said. "I'm only Buddhist on holidays now."

Stolz discussed her privilege of being white, Catholic and middle-class. She also mentioned her oppression as a female. The females on the panel discussed their fear of walking outside by themselves. Stolz discovered oppression, especially through her sister who is disabled, and noticed how people treated her differently as they grew up.

"We'd go to the bank, and I'd be 12, and she'd be 22, and they'd ask me if I wanted a loan," Stolz said.

Thandayuthapani is from India and has been in the United States for two years.

"I haven't faced the world yet, I've only faced students," Thandayuthapani said. "I've been treated excellently. I don't know what's going to happen in the real world, but as of now, I don't see anything bad about myself."

He also said he is oppressed in the sense that he is not an American citizen, and some jobs may not hire him, but he said he thinks positively.

"I wouldn't say that's bad," Thandayuthapani said. "I will soon have my master's degree; I have good hands and good legs."

The forum ended with a question-and-answer session. An audience member asked the panel how people can change the mindsets of people who discriminate.

"Education, education, education," Challender said.

The Season for Nonviolence ends Sunday, and the last event, the "Art of Rape," is at 7 tonight at Union Station.

Bond allocation funds McCain enhancements

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The bond surplus review committee allocated $23,000 for audio and visual enhancements for McCain Auditorium.

Kyle McGuffin, McCain Technical Director and project coordinator, said the audio and visual equipment will be used for events and presentations at McCain.

"They're not really for building enhancements but for more viewing and listening enhancements," he said.

Student Fee Bond Proposals

Part 1 of 6
A series featuring the project proposals for surplus bonds.

McCain will offer the equipment for use by student organizations at no additional charge, McGuffin said.

"We see quite a few students in our facility, whether it be outside organizations, classrooms, campus organizations," he said. "We felt it was something we didn't have that would benefit the student body."

A resolution to support the recommendations for the use of excess funds in the student bond surplus account passed Student Senate with a vote of 39-2-0 at its March 17 meeting.

Funds not spent at the end of Fiscal Year 2007 will revert back to the student bond surplus account, and exceptions can be granted by Senate, according to the resolution.

The resolution also states that progress reports for each project must be submitted to the student body vice president by March 1, 2007.

Student Body Vice President Grant Groene said there is no set date for when project funds will be allocated. The funds are handled through the Controller's Office.

While the project proposal initially requested $19,100, the committee granted it $23,000.

Matt Wagner, bond surplus fund committee member, said the committee granted additional funds so the project could get better equipment.

Wagner said the committee chose the project on the basis that student organizations need a facility on campus to use an auditorium and its resources.

"They have had to rent equipment from other facilities, so it will save students in the long run through student organizations," he said.

6,000 WNIT Championship tickets left for sale

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women will play Marquette on Friday night for the title of Women's National Invitation Tournament Champion.

The Wildcats defeated Western Kentucky 57-56 Tuesday night in Bramlage Coliseum in front of a crowd of 7,538 to advance to the championship game.

Casey Scott, assistant athletic director for K-State, said he expects the number of tickets sold for the semifinal game to be exceeded early tomorrow, and Bramlage could be sold out to its capacity of 13,000 people.

"We opened the ticket office right after the game (Tuesday) night and got a nice response right out of the gates," Scott said. "We continue to encourage K-State fans to come out and support the Lady Cats, and hopefully we can have a sellout crowd."

Tickets will be on sale from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. today and from 9 a.m. until tipoff at 7 p.m. Friday.

Fans interested in attending the championship game also can call 1-800-221-CATS or order online at www.k-statesports.com.

Tickets will be sold at the ticket office on the northwest side of Bramlage, and there are about 6,000 remaining.

Scott said they sold about 3,000 tickets after Tuesday's game and 4,000 during the day on Wednesday. He expects at least another 3,000 to be sold today, with hopes of filling up all the seats before tipoff.

The seats are on a first-come, first-served basis, with student tickets priced at $5 and general public tickets priced at $12.

Students must present a student ID in order to obtain the student price, and the ticket office will only sell one student ticket per ID.

Aleigha Ford, junior in criminology, said she enjoys attending the women's home games when she gets a chance and already has purchased her tickets for the championship game.

"I got eight student IDs from my friends and went to Bramlage Wednesday afternoon to get tickets for them all," Ford said. "I am excited for this game, because it is just another chance to cheer on the Lady Cats."

Gregg Joyal, junior in park management, is an operations supervisor at Bramlage, and he supervises the usher staff and deals with any questions or concerns patrons might have. He said he has attended every home basketball game, men's and women's, for the last three years, and he said he expects an excellent turnout and is eager to attend the game.

"I usually don't get to watch the games very much because I am trying to make sure everything is running smoothly," Joyal said. "Lately, though, I have really been getting into it, and I hope we win because it will give us as fans and the (K-State) athletic department something else to brag about to go along with the two new coaches hired for next season (Bob Huggins, men's basketball, and Ron Prince, football).

Joyal also said Bramlage does not usually handle crowds of the expected magnitude of Friday's game, but his staff is well prepared for an event like this.

"We've handled huge crowds before, with one of our most recent games being the Kansas game," Joyal said. "Our staff has trained for this type of an event all year. We are ready for a huge crowd, and I hope that's exactly what we get."

Close call

Wildcats beat Chicago State, prepare for Nebraska series

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wednesday afternoon at Tointon Family Stadium, the K-State baseball team (19-3 overall, 1-2 Big 12 Conference) cruised into the ninth inning with a five-run lead over Chicago State in the second and final game of the series.

Pitcher Chase Bayuk notched his fifth win of the season on K-State's 8-7 victory while Chase Marshall took the loss for Chicago State, falling to 0-5 on the season.

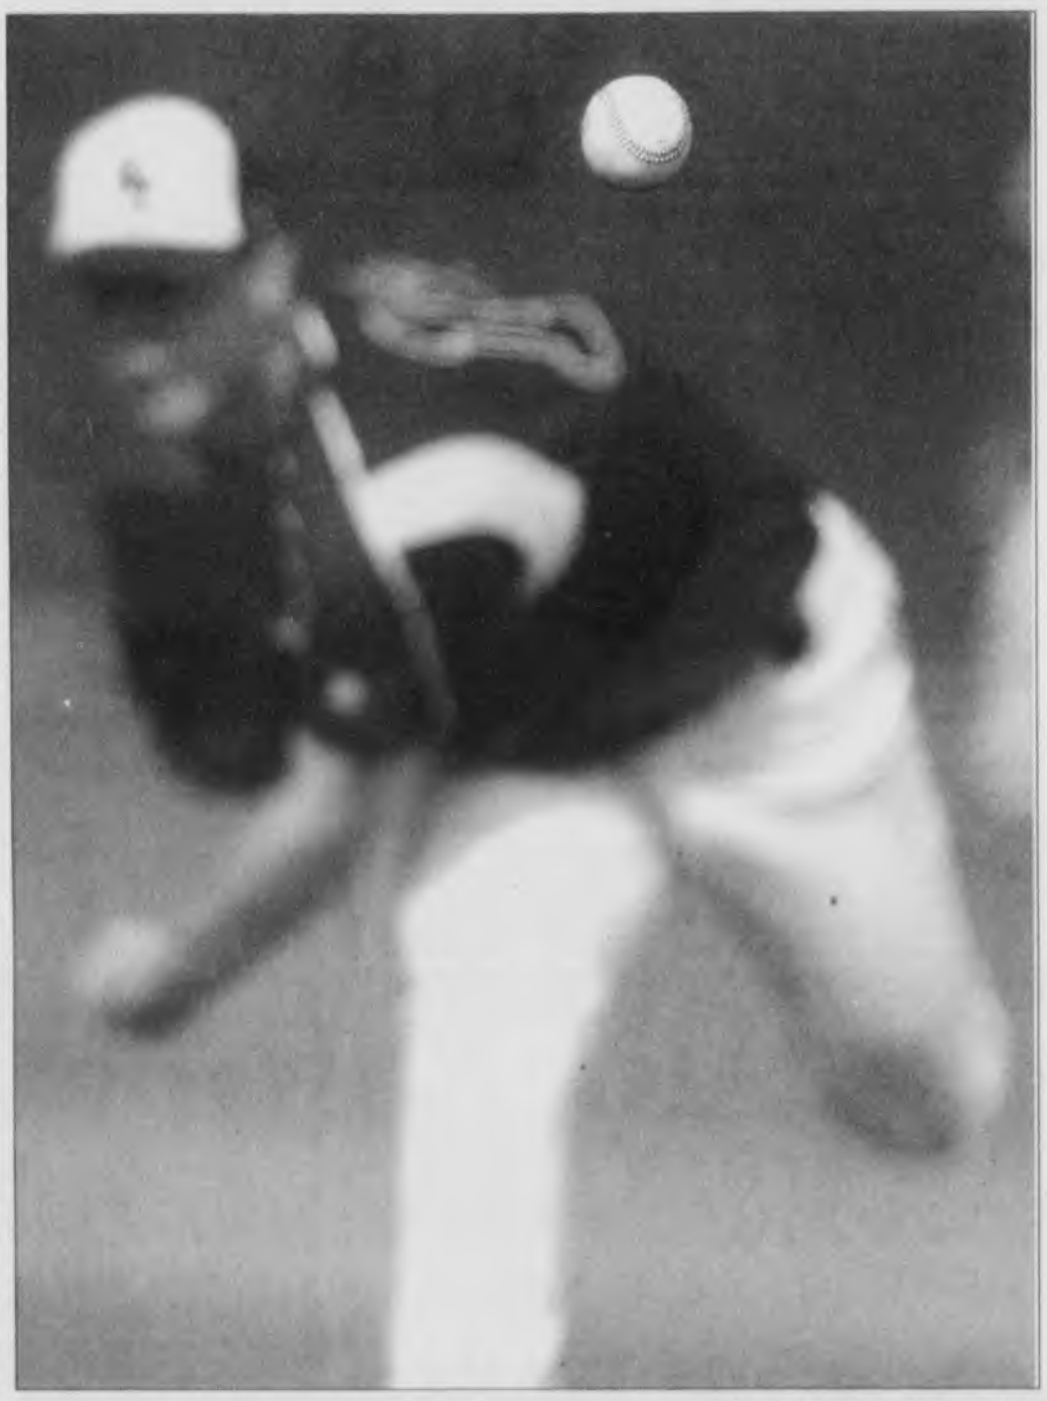
After keeping the Cougars (3-15) scoreless in the fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth innings, K-State was unable to find the third out in the ninth.

"I think we came out there too relaxed that last inning," senior Barrett Rice said. "It's Chicago State; it's always close games. You just keep fighting, keep hitting. The game's not over until nine innings."

To start the final inning, K-State coach Brad Hill made a pitching change, swapping freshman Trevor Hurley – who only pitched the eighth inning, with senior closer Bryan Peterson.

In his one inning, Peterson allowed four runs and four hits, one of which went to deep right field and let three runs to score.

"I think we just got too lax the last inning," Rice said. "Instead of (Peterson) just coming in and shutting the door, we just kind of got lax. Hopefully we can come out and compete this weekend."



Luckily, the Wildcats' eight runs were enough to hold off the Cougars. In the top of the first, Chicago State scored two runs on freshman pitcher Todd Vogel to get the quick lead. In the bottom of the opening inning, K-State answered with one run from junior Jared Goedert, the first of his game-high three runs.

However, it was Goedert's solo home run in the third that tied the game. After that, Chicago State only scored once in the top of the fourth before going on the four-inning dry streak.

K-State managed to score two runs in the fifth and sixth innings to put the score at 7-3. The Wildcats tacked on another in the eighth, pushing the score to 8-3.

Hill said he really didn't have a message for the team after the close win and said he wanted to prepare for this weekend's three-game home series against Big 12 rival Nebraska, the No. 3-ranked team in the country, according to

Recruit Williams confirms desire to play for K-State

By Mark Potter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Kenny Williams has drawn comparisons to NBA All-Star and Detroit Piston Ben Wallace, and he wants to play for K-State next season.

Even now.

Williams, a 6-foot-8 power forward from St. Petersburg College in St. Petersburg, Fla., signed a National Letter of Intent to play for K-State in November 2005.

Four months later, K-State fired Wooldridge and hired coach Bob Huggins.

Huggins met with Williams earlier this week, and Williams confirmed his desire to become a Wildcat.

Earnest Crumbley, who has coached Williams for the past two seasons at St. Petersburg, said Williams is excited to play for Huggins.

"Excited to the point that he understands he has an opportunity to play basketball at a higher level," Crumbley said. "And the other thing is he will be able to play for a great coach."

In Williams' two seasons at St. Petersburg, the Titans repeated as Suncoast Conference champions. Williams led the team in scoring both seasons, averaging 16.4 points as a freshman and 17.6 points as a sophomore.

This season, Williams shot 55 percent from the field and led St. Petersburg in rebounds (9.0 per game), blocks (2.0 per game) and minutes played (928).

"Very much the same, but (Williams has) a better ability to score the basketball," Crumbley said. "He defends, he rebounds, and he's a physical presence that won't back down from competition. It doesn't matter how small or big the competition is."

In November, Williams selected K-State over a number of schools, including Florida State, Purdue, Southern California, St. John's and UNLV.

Wooldridge said he was drawn to Williams' athleticism and strength under the basket.

"He's a very athletic, strong, tough kid that we thought could enhance the inside part of our team," Wooldridge said of the 240-pound Williams, who committed to play football at Auburn in 2003. "He had some good stats out of a very good league. He's well-coached, coming out of a very good program."

So far, Williams is the only recruit to commit to K-State.

Huggins' squad will lose two scholarship players in Dramane Diarra and Schyler Thomas. In addition, the Collegian reported Tuesday that Curtis Allen is considering transferring, and there is a chance Cartier Martin will declare eligibility for the upcoming NBA draft.

As a result, Huggins is unaware of the exact number of scholarships he'll need to fill.

Though Huggins is not allowed to speak about recruiting, he has previously expressed strong interest in five-star, 7-foot-2 center Jason Bennett. The senior from Jacksonville, Fla., originally committed to play for Huggins at Cincinnati.

Huggins and Wooldridge each said they will attend the men's Final Four this weekend in Indianapolis.

Wooldridge will continue to search for a coaching vacancy to his liking but said he is keeping his options open.

"I've talked with some people, but right now, everything is open-ended," Wooldridge said. "Right now, I don't have any specific plans."

George Mason an ultimate bracket buster, Florida's success not surprising

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

I am happy to report that I am doing extremely well in my 2006 NCAA Tournament bracket, with only the Final Four left to be played.

I can safely say that I was right when I put Louisiana State and UCLA in the Final Four.

I was also correct in picking Boston College and Connecticut in making the Final – wait a minute ... Florida? George Mason? George who?

Where did these two teams come from?

OK, so Florida wasn't that big of a surprise. The Gators started the season winning 17 straight games, which vaulted them to the No. 2 seed in the country, according to the Associated Press Top 25 Poll.

They also ran through the Southeastern Conference Tournament, beating LSU in the semifinals and South Carolina in the championship game to take the crown. But this team was not supposed to be this good this fast.

They went into this season returning only two starters, sophomore forwards Al Horford and Cory Brewer.

The team lost its three best players to the NBA Draft in forwards David Lee and Matt Walsh and guard Anthony Roberson.

Combined, they averaged 45.7 points per game, and Lee averaged nine rebounds per game.

The numbers don't do these guys justice, however, because they possessed tremendous leadership qualities, and I am surprised with the other players besides Horford and Brewer who stepped up into starting roles and have performed down the stretch.

Junior Lee Humphrey and sophomores Taurean Green and Joakim Noah each were huge contributors down the stretch for the Gators. They combined for 48 of the team's 75 points in the 13-point Elite Eight victory over Villanova last Monday. Noah recorded 15 rebounds and also had five blocked shots in the game.

So I guess I can see Florida making it, but these guys from Fairfax, Va., are a different story.

First of all, who George Mason has beat to make it this far is pretty stunning. Three former national champion and future hall-of-fame coaches, two Final Four teams

BKC | Bennett to visit Manhattan next week

Rivals.com has reported that Jacksonville (Fla.) Arlington Country Day High School center Jason Bennett will be coming to visit K-State next week.

Bennett

The 7-foot-3, 240-pounder has reported interest in K-State since the hiring of coach Bob Huggins.

Country Day coach Rex Morgan said Bennett is coming to Manhattan April 6 with his parents. He also said they plan on coming to see the town, the school and meet with the coaches.

Bennett has already taken one official visit when he traveled to University of Auburn two weeks ago.

BKC | Kansas City could get Final Four

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Mayor Kay Barnes said Wednesday she is "very optimistic" Kansas City could get a Final Four if voters approve tax measures to fund renovations and a rolling roof at the Truman Sports Complex.

Barnes said she and Kansas City Chiefs founder Lamar Hunt had spoken with Myles Brand, president of the NCAA, about plans for a rolling roof that would enclose the newly renovated Arrowhead Stadium.

"With the rolling roof, no sports facility in America can match Arrowhead as a host site for a mega event such as the Final Four," Barnes said at a news conference.

Major League Baseball and the NFL already have guaranteed that Kansas City would host a Super Bowl and an All-Star game if the renovations are made. The rolling roof would be necessary for the Super Bowl.

NBA | Baseball to investigate steroid use

NEW YORK — Major League Baseball will investigate past steroid use by Barry Bonds and other players and plans to hire former U.S. Senate majority leader George Mitchell to lead the effort, ESPN reported Wednesday.

Bonds

A baseball official told The Associated Press on Wednesday that final plans for the investigation were still pending, as was a definite answer from Mitchell. An announcement was expected later this week.

The official spoke on condition of anonymity because commissioner Bud Selig has not yet made an announcement.

Selig has said for several weeks that he was evaluating how to proceed in the wake of "Game of Shadows," a book by two San Francisco Chronicle reporters detailing alleged extensive steroid use by Bonds and other baseball stars.

LPGA | Wie ready for first major

RANCHO MIRAGE, Calif. — Michelle Wie's final practice round for the Kraft Nabisco Championship, her first LPGA Tour major as a professional, began at 6:20 a.m., giving her enough time to squeeze in nine holes at Mission Hills before the pro-am came through.

Wie

Her fourth full swing was a 4-iron from 204 yards on the par-5 11th, struck cleanly and with such control that it stopped 15 feet away to the right of the pin.

Each tournament is an evaluation of her game, and her decision to turn pro last October came just six days before her 16th birthday.

Defining flavor

Researchers create panel to taste, profile 37 cheeses

By Cj Lehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sweaty. Goaty. Chemical.

Cheese descriptions can be baffling to the uninitiated consumer, but a group of K-State researchers hope to offer insight into the flavors.

Although definition descriptions developed by the researchers will benefit professional cheese-tasters and owners of cheese shops, mostly they will be useful for developing quality control of artisan cheeses and explaining cheese to customers, said Delores Chambers, assistant professor in the Department of Human Nutrition and director of the Sensory Analysis Center.

"This is a really popular topic," Chambers said. "The popularity of cheese has really exploded in the last few years."

Annlyse Rétiveau, Emilien Esteve and Chambers teamed up to select a five-person panel to taste, discuss and develop a lexicon of working definitions of the flavors frequently found in French cheeses, Chambers said.

While cheese that smells like unwashed gym socks or wet animal fur may not sound appealing, the variety of cheeses allows something for everyone. Being able to speak the language of cheese makes finding the right cheese much easier.

Chambers' research defines sweaty cheese as sour, stale and reminiscent of perspiration-generated foot odor. The goaty cheeses, such as Feta, are musty and smell like wet fur. Of course, the description of buttery cheeses as being natural, fresh and slightly salty is more appealing to most, Chambers said.

Being able to have the same words and idea of what they meant was important for Chambers at work and in social settings, she said.

"The idea for this came from a dinner party at Annlyse's house when she had a plate of French cheese that looked and tasted different," Chambers said.

To begin, the researchers hired five panelists to taste and define the characteristics of cheeses. Panelists go through a year-long training and must be able to scale, describe and tell differences in cheese for the job, Chambers said. To keep panelists from getting ill or overworked, the tasting is limited to three hours per day, Chambers said.

"It's like a glass master who blows glass," she said. "They only do it three or four hours per day because it is hard work."

To develop definitions that range from ashy and earthy to sweet and sour, panelists tasted 43 natural French cheeses, but only 37 types were fully profiled, according to the research paper, "Developing a lexicon for the flavor description of French cheeses," by Rétiveau, Chambers and Esteve. The cheeses were purchased online and imported from France, which affected the taste, Chambers said.

"Fresh, young cheeses lose flavor when shipped," she said. "Older, more mature cheeses don't as much."

All cheeses, but especially soft cheeses, like mozzarella, require a lot of attention and should be wrapped to prevent staleness and dryness, said Scott Benjamin, chef and owner of 4 Olives Wine Bar, 3033 Anderson Ave.

"Cut as little as possible," Benjamin said. "We cut to order when it is off of the big wheels."

Jeff Pfannenstiel, owner of Mercado Gourmet Grocery, 1222 Moro St., said the way cheeses are served also is important.

"I won't slice this cheese for sandwiches," he said of Mercado's cheese selection. "These are cheeses that should be eaten at room temperature with a knife."

Ben Hathaway, cheese instructor at gourmet food store Dean and DeLuca in Leawood, Kan., said taking cheese out of the refrigerator at least 30 minutes before serving is recommended.

"Cheese may seem kind of bland when it is cold," Hathaway said, "but when you let it warm up to room temperature a lot of the finer elements of the cheese are going to come out."

Serving cheese with dried fruits and breads can add to the flavors and soften the more pungent tastes of some cheeses, Hathaway said.

"With bleu cheese a good thing to do is pair it with walnuts," he said. "The walnut oils hit the tongue first and kill that first, clean bite of bleu cheese."

When shopping for more exotic cheese for the first time it is best to start with a mild, cow's milk cheese, Pfannenstiel said.

"Everybody has grown up drinking cow's milk," he said. "You already have the palate for it."

Pfannenstiel said Mercado's Italian cheese selection is truer to what people would get in Italy and sells better than the French cheeses.

"French cheeses are a little too out there for most people unless they have traveled," Pfannenstiel said. "The people that have traveled know that what they get here won't be as good because it has been pasteurized."

Benjamin said only about one-third of the cheeses on the 4 Olives menu are pasteurized because 60-day-old cheeses are old enough to eliminate the possibility of listeria and are legal to sell in the United States. Unpasteurized cheeses are typically better, Benjamin said.

"Foodies and cheese nerds will tell you unpasteurized is the way to go," Benjamin said.

Room temperature, unpasteurized cheeses are universally agreed to be the best, but what the cheese is served with or on can be contentious, said Mercado's Pfannenstiel.

"I eat it by itself with a butter knife or some rustic bread," Pfannenstiel said.

Chambers said that while unsalted crackers were used to cleanse panelists' mouths during testing, she prefers cheese without crackers.

"A lot of people like cheese with crackers," she said. "I just eat it plain."

When choosing breads or crackers to accompany cheese, it is important not to overwhelm the cheeses, Benjamin said.

"Avoid bread or crackers that interfere," he said. "Crackers are horrible and not sourdough or wheat. Just generic white bread like a baguette or ciabatta is best."

A wine that is produced in the same geographic region as the cheese is usually a good pairing but is not always the most important factor in pairings, Pfannenstiel said.

"Match the weight of the cheese with the weight of the wine," he said. "Drink a light, nice wine with a light cheese. Don't worry so much about red and white, but match the weight."

Wine and cheese pairings are a specialty at 4 Olives, and while not all cheese pairs well with wine, a light- or medium-bodied red wine is the most universal wine match for cheese, Benjamin said. The idea of pairing wine and cheese by region doesn't always hold true, he said.

"A lot of the great cheese places like Normandy or Brittany are too cold for wine," Benjamin said. "France is more regionalized while we are more diverse."

Being adventurous and willing to overcome misconceptions is necessary to enjoy cheeses, Chambers said.

"People don't have a respect for cheese because they don't know better," Chambers said. "They see cheese with mold on it and don't want to try it because they think it will be too strong."

Even people without an expansive cheese vocabulary can enjoy eating cheese. Hathaway said he encourages people to take risks with cheese and eat what tastes good.

"There's a lot of things you won't find in books that are a lot better than anything you might read about," Hathaway said. "It really is all about personal taste and being adventurous."

Pfannenstiel said the simplicity and longevity of cheese appeals to him.

"Get a little wedge of cheese, a handful of grapes and a loaf of bread," he said. "It's really exotic and easy as heck. It's been around for hundreds and hundreds of years, and it is one of the most perfect foods."

Federline to release album in August

Federline

The expected release date is August, said a spokeswoman for FYI Public Relations, which is promoting the album.

"The inspiration and meaning behind the title, 'Playing With Fire,' is self-explanatory," the 28-year-old Federline, known to some as K-Fed, said in a statement Tuesday.

His first single, the critically slammed Brazilian groove "PopoZao," was released earlier this year through Yahoo Music Unlimited.

Julia Roberts makes Broadway debut

The first lines spoken by Julia Roberts in her Broadway debut were drowned out by applause at an eagerly awaited preview of "Three Days of Rain."

Appearing in Richard Greenberg's 1997 Pulitzer Prize nominee, Roberts plays a woman unraveling the truth behind her father's death.

Roberts co-stars with Paul Rudd and Bradley Cooper. The actress didn't take a solo curtain call and shared the spotlight with both actors.

Dining centers offer vegetarian, seafood meal options during Lent

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Steve Bruss, senior in sociology, prepares a shrimp stir-fry meal for a diner at Kramer Dining Center on Wednesday evening. Students who observe Lent have vegetarian or fish meal options at the K-State Student Union and campus dining centers.

Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

For those students observing Lent, the K-State Student Union and campus dining centers have tried to provide options to help students find something to eat.

Sheryl Powell, director of the Kramer Dining Center, said Kramer tries to offer fish or vegetarian options for students who observe Lent.

"We know a lot of people who live with us who practice Lent," Powell said. "We try to do something, but sometimes a vegetarian item just isn't enough."

During the first Friday of Lent this year, Kramer offered tuna fish as a lunch option.

Powell said she received a thank-you note from a student who seemed to appreciate the option.

Tina Griffin, director of Dining Services at the Union, said the Union tries to provide a variety of options year-round for students with different meal preferences.

"Specifically for Lent, we do seafood, or we might run a few specials," Griffin said.

Although Griffin said the Union tries to provide tasty options for students, when creating meal ideas for students, she said extensive thought does not go into what should be served specifically for Lent.

"We discuss how many ways we can serve fish," she said. "That's really all the strategy we go for."

Alex Suñé, junior in preprofessional secondary education, is a resident of Haymaker Hall but said he eats most of his meals at Van Zile Dining Center with friends.

Suñé said a sign is posted to let students know no-meat choices are available for meals.

As a student who observes Lent, Suñé said he appreciated those choices were an option for students but wished for more variety in the menu.

"I get a little disappointed at times," he said. "There's a lot of people on this campus that practice that, and you would think they would cater more to that."

Although he would like to see more options for those observing Lent, Suñé said he understands it is hard to cater to all the dietary needs of students and thought the complexes tried to do that.

"It would just be nice to see things more appetizing," Suñé said.

Casino bill defeated in Kansas Senate

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Kansas Senate bill that would allow casinos in Wyandotte County and either Crawford or Cherokee counties was killed in the Senate this month.

The bill would have created the Kansas Expanded Lottery Act, which would authorize destination casinos and racetrack gaming facilities.

Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer, said he voted for the bill but said he did not support gaming.

"I think gaming is poor public policy, and I think if we could outlaw all of it I would support that," Umbarger said.

"But since that is not an option, the state should have an ability to regulate and have an oversight of gaming."

Umbarger said Kansas already has four gambling facilities and cited bingo games, dog and horse tracks and the lottery and casinos.

"What people can't get access to within the borders of Kansas they can travel to Missouri to get," Umbarger said.

"This is why I have taken the position that if we are going to have it, let's control it, and let's get the local people the chance to vote."

Sen. Phil Journey, R-Haysville, said he is not a supporter of the bill.

Journey said the bill received a low amount of support.

"The bill is too greedy with the amount of tracks and machines to allow for the viability of a destination casino in those jurisdictions," Journey said.

Journey said he did not think the expansion of gaming in Kansas would improve the economy.

"I believe that financially for this state, gaming would have a likelihood of being revenue-neutral or costing us money," Journey said.

Sen. David Haley, D-Kansas City, Kan., said the bill would have benefited the economy.

"We need to find ways to get additional money in our state," Haley said.

"One way is to raise taxes, one way is to cut necessary services, and the other would be to find windfalls available – and one available is the money we are losing from other states from those are who are gambling at regional casinos."

Haley said it was not the Legislature's job to determine how Kansas residents should spend their income.

"I respect the choice people make with their discretionary income," Haley said.

"It's a matter of choice, and we are not these people's parents – we are not supposed to be preaching to them. We are supposed to reflect the wants of the majority."

Haley also said the bill addressed concerns regarding gambling addiction.

"Statistics show that between 2 and 4 percent of people become addicted, and certainly this bill has safeguards for that 'problem gambler,'" Haley said.

"And I do share the concerns for that 2 to 4 percent, but at the same time, these are personal decisions adults make."

Umbarger said he thought a similar bill would be brought up for debate sometime in the near future.

"There is still a lot of talk of trying to revive this issue, and I thinks it's a 50-50 chance whether we will get a gaming debate in the Senate this year," Umbarger said, "but I can almost guarantee one will be back next year."

Movie raises awareness of children's plight

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A documentary made by three young Californians is bringing the plight of thousands of Ugandan children into the national spotlight.

The film, "Invisible Children," tells the story of rural Ugandan children who are caught in the midst of a decades-long civil war.

The film will be shown at 8 tonight in the K-State Student Union Flint Hills Room and at 7 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall.

Tonight's screening is sponsored by Invisible Children Inc., and Friday's screening will be sponsored by the Anthropology Club.

Valerie Houser, a volunteer for the Invisible Children Organization, said the film's screening at K-State was part of a national tour aimed at raising American awarerress of the situation in Uganda.

"The response to the film has been awesome," she said. "So many people have told us how thankful they are to have this film brought to them, because they didn't even know this was going on."

Houser said the film's creators, Jason Russell, Bobby Bailey and Laren Poole, traveled to Africa during summer 2003 with the intent of filming Sudanese refugees.

As the filmmakers followed the flow of refugees into the nearby country of Uganda, however, they were confronted with an even more turbulent situation created by a bitter civil war.

Russell, Bailey and Poole said they witnessed the flight of thousands of rural children to Ugandan cities every night, hoping to find a safer place to sleep than their isolated homes.

The children lie outside in the streets and town squares of larger cities, hoping the busier urban setting will allow them to avoid abduction by rebel soldiers.

Members of the Lord's Resistance Army, which has been labeled a terrorist organization by the U.S. Patriot Act, have been fighting against the Ugandan government for more than 20 years. A common tactic used by the LAR is to kidnap children from unprotected urban areas, often in their sleep. These children are brainwashed and forced to serve as soldiers in the rebel army, while their families often are killed.

For more information
Go to www.invisiblechildren.com.

When the filmmakers returned home, they formed the non-profit Invisible Children Inc. to work toward their goal of showing their film across the United States.

Katie Whitney, freshman in open option, said she first saw the film "Invisible Children" at a friend's house and brought it to her anthropology teacher's attention when she asked to write a class paper about it.

After viewing the film, Whitney's teacher and the Anthropology Club arranged Friday's screening of the film, she said.

"I felt like this was something people needed to be aware of," Whitney said. "I think in America we often don't know what's going on in other countries. This film raises awareness of an issue many people may be inspired to pursue."

Tim Schuler, sophomore in mass communications, recently arranged a small screening of "Invisible Children" at his home. He said the film was realistic and powerful.

"Three guys my age just went to Africa to film," he said. "It doesn't feel forced or disconnected like footage of celebrities visiting foreign countries. You can't walk away from the film unaffected."

Houser said a clip shown after each film screening tells viewers how they can assist the children in Uganda.

She said small donations make up the majority of Invisible Children Inc.'s funding.

"Ninety percent of funds come from high school and college students' donations of $20 or less," Houser said. "It's a great grass-roots organization that anyone can get involved in. You don't have to have a lot of money or know people in high places to help."

Class teaches water conservation to children

By Brian Tosh
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new spin on a communications class allows K-State students to research the effects of teaching water conservation to elementary school students.

The 32 junior- and senior-level college students in an environmental communications class have been preparing lesson plans and interactive activities designed to engage elementary school students in environmental education.

Funded by a Kansas Department of Health and the Environment (KDHE) grant, the project works jointly with the Kansas Association for Conservation and Environmental Education (KACEE).

"The class is centered around the actual project," said Steve Hill, assistant professor in the Department of Communications. "The goal is for our students to be able to better promote environmental education programs."

Using national curriculum from Project WET – Water Education for Teachers – students in environmental communications can adapt existing lesson plans to suit their specific needs.

KACEE executive director Laura Downey said she attends the class weekly to aid in relating to younger children. She conducts workshops about lesson planning, communication and assessment for using the Project WET information.

"A lot of what I do for this project is aimed toward helping the environmental education students learn how to effectively communicate with elementary school teachers and students," Downey said. "This project is unique because it involves a lot of hands-on education, which can be difficult to provide in a traditional classroom."

Designed by the Council of Environmental Educators, Project WET uses learning about the environment as the context for educating in multiple disciplines.

"These lessons are designed to meet state education standards because we are not only teaching the students about water conservation and the environment, but other subjects, too," said Mandy Stark, junior in agricultural communications and journalism. "We're showing them how to be better stewards while also working on math skills or language arts or even history."

Divided into eight teams and assigned to different Manhattan-area elementary schools, the students in the class will conduct four 45-minute sessions over the course of the semester.

Six of the teams had their first session on March 9, and the other two will begin March 30, due to conflicts with scheduled state assessments.

Students involved in the project said they feel that the targeted students will benefit from the education the class and Project WET provides.

"I was impressed with how receptive the students were to what we had to say," said Diana Bliss, senior in park management and conservation. "Service learning, like what we're doing in this project, is a great way to communicate with young people."

The project looks at the effectiveness of teaching elementary students about water conservation and how best to communicate with teachers the importance of including conservation-based curriculum.

"Our ultimate goal is to have these students grow up to be informed citizens," Downey said. "We're trying to provide them with the resources they need to make informed decisions."

New speech honor society to induct 1st members in April

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lambda Pi Eta is the official communication studies honor society of the National Communication Association. It has more than 400 active chapters at four-year colleges and universities worldwide, and there is now a K-State chapter.

April 11 is the first induction ceremony for K-State.

"A few months ago we were approved by OSAS (Office of Student Activities and Services)," Hanson said, "and a few weeks ago, our application of chapter status was approved."

At the end of last semester, Erika Imbody, instructor of speech communications, theater and dance, came to one of Hanson's classes and asked for people who would be interested in beginning Lambda Pi Eta.

"I think it will be successful, like all honoraries, because it's good for networking, and it provides support and ways to have your résumé in best form by providing workshops," Hanson said.

The national requirements for student membership are a 3.0 cumulative grade-point average with 60 semester or 90 quarter credit hours completed.

Hanson said officers ask that the applicants have taken 12 hours from the Department of Speech.

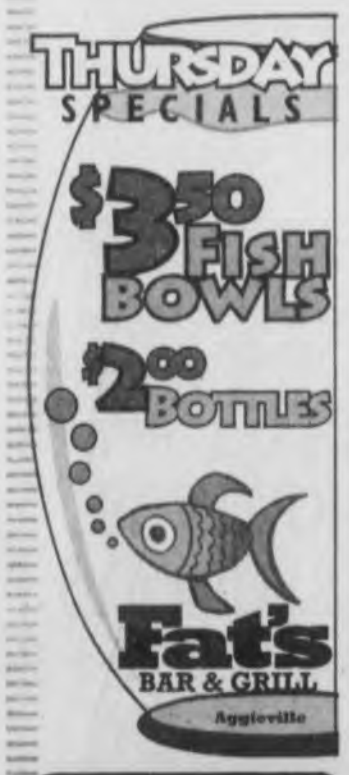
The goals of the honor society include stimulating interest in the communication field, providing an opportunity to discuss and exchange ideas in the field and recognizing, fostering and rewarding outstanding scholastic achievement in communication studies.

"We want this to be a student organization that really has the students' needs in mind," Hanson said. "It's not just about prestige. It's for life lessons that you don't always get in a classroom setting."

Kevin Phillips, sophomore in speech, is the secretary and Webmaster of the society. He said he joined to further his experience in the speech communication department.

"At K-State we have an amazing department, where the professors are very attentive to students' needs," Phillips said. "It's my goal to try and help other students discover this under-represented department, because it truly has been life-changing for me."

Imbody said she was approached by Lila Preston, graduate student in speech communication and a past national president of Lambda Pi Eta, about being an adviser.



"This is a nationally recognized honor society, and I thought it would be a great opportunity for K-State students to further their academic careers and to be recognized for outstanding achievement in scholarship," Imbody said.

Casino bill defeated in Kansas Senate

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A Kansas Senate bill that would allow casinos in Wyandotte County and either Crawford or Cherokee counties was killed in the Senate this month.

The bill would have created the Kansas Expanded Lottery Act, which would authorize destination casinos and racetrack gaming facilities.

Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer, said he voted for the bill but said he did not support gaming.

"I think gaming is poor public policy, and I think if we could outlaw all of it I would support that," Umbarger said.

Movie raises awareness of children's plight

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A documentary made by three young Californians is bringing the plight of thousands of Ugandan children into the national spotlight.

The film, "Invisible Children," tells the story of rural Ugandan children who are caught in the midst of a decades-long civil war.

The film will be shown at 8 tonight in the K-State Student Union Flint Hills Room and at 7 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall.

Tonight's screening is sponsored by Invisible Children Inc., and Friday's screening will be sponsored by the Anthropology Club.

Valerie Houser, a volunteer for the Invisible Children Organization, said the film's screening at K-State was part of a national tour aimed at raising American awareness of the situation in Uganda.

"The response to the film has been awesome," she said. "So many people have told us how thankful they are to have this film brought to them, because they didn't even know this was going on."

Houser said the film's creators, Jason Russell, Bobby Bailey and Laren Poole, traveled to Africa during summer 2003 with the intent of filming Sudanese refugees.

As the filmmakers followed the flow of refugees into the nearby country of Uganda, however, they were confronted with an even more turbulent situation created by a bitter civil war.

Russell, Bailey and Poole said they witnessed the flight of thousands of rural children to Ugandan cities every night, hoping to find a safer place to sleep than their isolated homes.

The children lie outside in the streets and town squares of larger cities, hoping the busier urban setting will allow them to avoid abduction by rebel soldiers.

Members of the Lord's Resistance Army, which has been labeled a terrorist organization by the U.S. Patriot Act, have been fighting against the Ugandan government for more than 20 years. A common tactic used by the LAR is to kidnap children from unprotected urban areas, often in their sleep. These children are brainwashed and forced to serve as soldiers in the rebel army, while their families often are killed.

When the filmmakers returned home, they formed the non-profit Invisible Children Inc. to work toward their goal of showing their film across the United States.

Katie Whitney, freshman in open option, said she first saw the film "Invisible Children" at a friend's house and brought it to her anthropology teacher's attention when she asked to write a class paper about it.

After viewing the film, Whitney's teacher and the Anthropology Club arranged Friday's screening of the film, she said.

"I felt like this was something people needed to be aware of," Whitney said. "I think in America we often don't know what's going on in other countries. This film raises awareness of an issue many people may be inspired to pursue."

Tim Schuler, sophomore in mass communications, recently arranged a small screening of "Invisible Children" at his home. He said the film was realistic and powerful.

"Three guys my age just went to Africa to film," he said. "It doesn't feel forced or disconnected like footage of celebrities visiting foreign countries. You can't walk away from the film unaffected."

Houser said a clip shown after each film screening tells viewers how they can assist the children in Uganda.

She said small donations make up the majority of Invisible Children Inc.'s funding.

"Ninety percent of funds come from high school and college students' donations of $20 or less," Houser said. "It's a great grass-roots organization that anyone can get involved in. You don't have to have a lot of money or know people in high places to help."

Class teaches water conservation to children

By Brian Tosh
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new spin on a communications class allows K-State students to research the effects of teaching water conservation to elementary school students.

The 32 junior- and senior-level college students in an environmental communications class have been preparing lesson plans and interactive activities designed to engage elementary school students in environmental education.

Funded by a Kansas Department of Health and the Environment (KDHE) grant, the project works jointly with the Kansas Association for Conservation and Environmental Education (KACEE).

"The class is centered around the actual project," said Steve Hill, assistant professor in the Department of Communications. "The goal is for our students to be able to better promote environmental education programs."

Using national curriculum from Project WET – Water Education for Teachers – students in environmental communications can adapt existing lesson plans to suit their specific needs.

KACEE executive director Laura Downey said she attends the class weekly to aid in relating to younger children. She conducts workshops about lesson planning, communication and assessment for using the Project WET information.

"A lot of what I do for this project is aimed toward helping the environmental education students learn how to effectively communicate with elementary school teachers and students," Downey said. "This project is unique because it involves a lot of hands-on education, which can be difficult to provide in a traditional classroom."

Designed by the Council of Environmental Educators, Project WET uses learning about the environment as the context for educating in multiple disciplines.

"These lessons are designed to meet state education standards because we are not only teaching the students about water conservation and the environment, but other subjects, too," said Mandy Stark, junior in agricultural communications and journalism. "We're showing them how to be better stewards while also working on math skills or language arts or even history."

Divided into eight teams and assigned to different Manhattan-area elementary schools, the students in the class will conduct four 45-minute sessions over the course of the semester.

Six of the teams had their first session on March 9, and the other two will begin March 30, due to conflicts with scheduled state assessments.

Students involved in the project said they feel that the targeted students will benefit from the education the class and Project WET provides.

"I was impressed with how receptive the students were to what we had to say," said Diana Bliss, senior in park management and conservation. "Service learning, like what we're doing in this project, is a great way to communicate with young people."

The project looks at the effectiveness of teaching elementary students about water conservation and how best to communicate with teachers the importance of including conservation-based curriculum.

"Our ultimate goal is to have these students grow up to be informed citizens," Downey said. "We're trying to provide them with the resources they need to make informed decisions."

New speech honor society to induct 1st members in April

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lambda Pi Eta is the official communication studies honor society of the National Communication Association. It has more than 400 active chapters at four-year colleges and universities worldwide, and there is now a K-State chapter.

April 11 is the first induction ceremony for K-State.

"A few months ago we were approved by OSAS (Office of Student Activities and Services)," Hanson said, "and a few weeks ago, our application of chapter status was approved."

At the end of last semester, Erika Imbody, instructor of speech communications, theater and dance, came to one of Hanson's classes and asked for people who would be interested in beginning Lambda Pi Eta.

"I think it will be successful, like all honoraries, because it's good for networking, and it provides support and ways to have your résumé in best form by providing workshops," Hanson said.

The national requirements for student membership are a 3.0 cumulative grade-point average with 60 semester or 90 quarter credit hours completed.

Hanson said officers ask that the applicants have taken 12 hours from the Department of Speech.

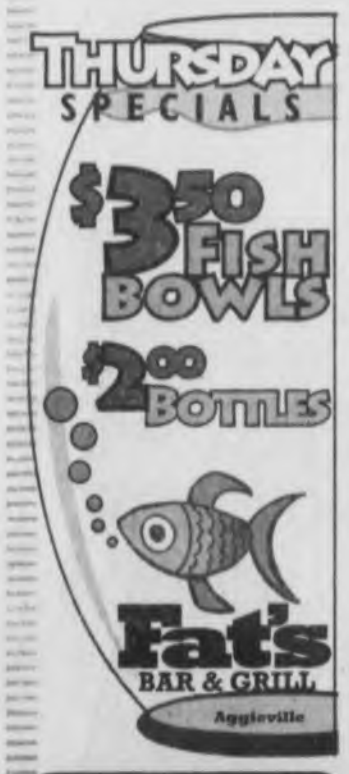
The goals of the honor society include stimulating interest in the communication field, providing an opportunity to discuss and exchange ideas in the field and recognizing, fostering and rewarding outstanding scholastic achievement in communication studies.

"We want this to be a student organization that really has the students' needs in mind," Hanson said. "It's not just about prestige. It's for life lessons that you don't always get in a classroom setting."

Kevin Phillips, sophomore in speech, is the secretary and Webmaster of the society. He said he joined to further his experience in the speech communication department.

"At K-State we have an amazing department, where the professors are very attentive to students' needs," Phillips said. "It's my goal to try and help other students discover this under-represented department, because it truly has been life-changing for me."

Imbody said she was approached by Lila Preston, graduate student in speech communication and a past national president of Lambda Pi Eta, about being an adviser.



"This is a nationally recognized honor society, and I thought it would be a great opportunity for K-State students to further their academic careers and to be recognized for outstanding achievement in scholarship," Imbody said.

Republicans at odds on amnesty in immigration bill

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Senate opened debate on an election-year immigration bill Wednesday, and leading Republicans swiftly clashed over whether the legislation would amount to amnesty for millions of illegal residents in the United States.

The legislation "goes too far in granting illegal immigrants with what most Americans will see as amnesty," said Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist of Tennessee, the first to speak on the bill. "I disagree with this approach ... because granting amnesty now will only encourage further and further disrespect for the law."

"I want to disagree with him head on. It is not amnesty," he said.

Specter said illegal residents would have to be current on their taxes, undergo background checks and clear other obstacles before gaining a place on a "citizenship track."

The disagreement underscored not only the divisions within the Senate, but the extent to which the fate of 11 million illegal immigrants has come to dominate the issue. Adding a fresh layer of political complexity, Hispanics make up a fast-growing segment of the electorate and have demonstrated by the hundreds of thousands in recent days in opposition to punitive legislation.

In general, the bill under consideration in the Senate is designed to strengthen enforcement of U.S. borders, regulate the flow into the country of so-called guest workers and determine the legal future of the illegal population scattered across all 50 states.

The House has passed legislation limited to border enforcement. Republican leaders have signaled in recent days they are receptive to an expanded measure, and immigration has taken on added importance for the GOP in the run-up to midterm elections.

"We are not going to discount anything right now," House Speaker Dennis Hastert said several hours before the Senate debate opened. "Our first priority is to protect the borders. We also know there is a need in some sectors of this economy for a guest worker program," added the Illinois Republican

Kansas City engineers put drivers on left to ease on-ramp traffic

By Matt Sedensky
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Engineers are planning a brazen design to ease congestion and reduce accidents here that discards something sacred among American motorists – driving on the right side of the road.

Missouri Department of Transportation officials considered a number of plans for the downtown Front Street approach to Interstate 435. But the one they settled on appears to be a national first, costs the least and is expected to most effectively handle traffic, by briefly crisscrossing lanes and putting drivers on the left, a position seldom experienced this side of the Atlantic.

"When we first heard about it from one of our peers of course we were skeptical," said Josh Scott, a transportation planner who worked on the design. "But not only was it feasible, but it actually worked better from all of the other alternatives."

Road planners here say they modeled their so-called "diverging diamond" design after one in use in the French city of Versailles, where like here, motorists drive on the right. The $6 million price tag nearly cut in half projections of $11 million for competing ideas; the project is to be started and finished in 2007.

Once done, drivers following Front Street will reach a traffic signal, then be guided to the opposite side of the road, divided by a concrete median with glare screens to minimize potentially disorienting views of cars to the right, who switched sides at the light as well. After about 600 to 700 feet, motorists reach another traffic signal and are returned to the right side of the road.

Ramps before the first and second lights allow motorists to enter I-435.

"Most of us look at it and we say, 'What?'" said Susan McCubbins, a transportation project manager for the state. "Then we think it through and we realize the safety and traffic advantages."

While officials here are believed to be the first in this country to approve such a design, they are not the first to consider. In Ohio, engineers were studying the diverging diamond plan as an alternative to reconstructing a bridge in Findlay. They ultimately decided to put off a new bridge by simply increasing the number of lanes on the existing one, though engineers still have praise for the wrong-side-of-the-road design.

"From an engineering standpoint it makes a lot of sense," said Eric Pfenning, an Ohio Department of Transportation engineer.

BASEBALL | Pitching plays important role in win

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Matt Marasco fields a ground ball between third and short stop to get a Chicago State player out at first. K-State will be host to Nebraska for a weekend series at Tointon Family Stadium.

the Associated Press.

"We won two games. Let's get moving on, get prepared for Nebraska," Hill said. "Obviously, we talk a lot about trying not to play to your opponents a little bit, but at the same time, I think what we're trying not to do is have a light switch where you play at this level today now we're trying to jack it up and play Nebraska.

"That's one thing I don't think we really did, the level wasn't really where we needed it to be the last two days."

K-State was able to sweep Chicago State in both games of the series, winning the first game 4-0.

"We're fortunate to get out of here with a few wins, I hope we realize that," Hill said. "We gave away a lot of bats. We could have put this thing away, extended out the lead to where it wasn't even close there in the last inning. We just can't do those things."

Hill said the team needs to be able to pitch through in order to be more successful. He also said Peterson gave batters too much time to watch him during the ninth inning on Wednesday.

"When those guys see four or five pitches from him, they're able to see what he's doing," Hill said. "He wasn't really sharp, but we came out with a win, and we'll take it."

Hill said he is looking forward to the weekend series against the 18-4, 2-1 Huskers, and he also said the Wildcats learned from their first two Big 12 losses of the season against Missouri.

"Against Missouri we didn't deal with adversity really good, made a couple of errors and didn't handle that," he said. "We rode that, what we call the emotional roller coaster too much. We let those errors really take us down to a lower level, and we never could really generate energy and enthusiasm at the end to kind of get back control of that series."

Senior Joe Roundy said Big 12 play is more intense than the non-conference portion of the schedule.

"We're just going to hopefully have more of our fans here this weekend," he said.

APARTMENT COMPLEXES

"Make friends with the people on the ground floor," Knapp said. "It's important that you know your neighbors, and that's something you should do beforehand, of course. You should make plans beforehand for someplace you can go if your apartment doesn't provide a good place."

Melanie Nord, employee at University Crossing Apartments, said the staff tells the residents to go to a first-floor apartment in case of a weather-related emergency.

"We don't have a storm shelter here, but the first-floor apartments are safe," said Nord, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education.

Knapp said residents should check with the managers of their apartment complex to see the exact protocol for a tornado because some places might have a basement or a shelter.

MOBILE HOMES

Some students make their home in one of the mobile home parks in Manhattan, which, in a severe storm, could be risky.

"Structurally, mobile homes are weaker than frame housing," Knapp said. "They can actually be turned over and suffer significant damage from winds as low as 60 miles per hour, the lowest setting for a tornado. They're not built to withstand the force of winds from a tornado."

Knapp said parks usually are equipped with a community storm shelter.

"Sometimes there is also some kind of recreation center – somewhere that's more structurally sound in the park," she said. "If not, once again, make plans with friends somewhere that is more structurally sound."

Knapp said, again, residents should check with the managers to find out what options are available to them.

Knapp said probably the most important thing, besides knowing where and how to get shelter, is to know how one will get storm alerts. Tornado sirens, she said, are not meant to be a principle way of hearing about a storm.

"The sirens won't be going off until a tornado is actually spotted, and unfortunately, the first place a tornado could touch down might be right on top of you," she said.

the teams. They always make it come down to the wire."

Brandon Smart, senior in management, said he watches the show to see the different places.

"I really like traveling, and I like seeing new places and different cultures," he said.

Smart said having a couple from Manhattan on "The Amazing Race" is a good reason to watch.

"It's more fun watching it because it's closer to home," he said.

Sara Coffey, graduate student in public administration, said she also enjoys the travel aspect.

"I've always watched the show, ever since it came on," she said. "I really enjoy watching the traveling all over the world."

from a year ago, arguably the No. 1 team in the country and the defending national champions.

Tom Izzo's No. 6-ranked Michigan State squad, Roy Williams' No. 3 North Carolina team and Jim Calhoun's star-studded No. 1 UConn team all fell to this Cinderella story.

Did I mention George Mason was 0-3 all-time in the NCAA Tournament before this season?

How did this these guys even make the dance – they didn't even win their conference championship.

The Patriots ended up defeating the Spartans and went on to upset the Tar Heels, Wichita State and UConn to become the second 11-seed in NCAA Tournament's current seeding structure to reach the Final Four, the other being LSU in 1986.

Patriot coach Jim Larranaga has done an outstanding job with this team, and I would love to see this story continue.

The Patriots versus the Gators on April 1 will be a fun game to watch.

Either way, the Gators or Patriots will reach the National Championship on April 3, and I never heard anybody pick these two teams a couple weeks ago.

Students, faculty, staff can attend practice today

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Chances are good that nearly every student on the K-State campus has never had the opportunity to do what is available to them starting today.

This spring, Friday football practices will be open to just K-State students, faculty and staff beginning with today's practice from 4-6 p.m., something first-year coach Ron Prince has instituted.

"I would love to see the students come out, bring their lunch, have fun, get to know the players and really, on some levels, appreciate what they go through," Prince said. "We have a lot of fun playing this game and coaching this game. I want people to see that."

Prince said he hopes the new opportunity to catch the Wildcat football team practice brings out thousands of students.

In addition to the Friday practices, students and all other fans can catch the Wildcats in action at their Saturday practices as well, which are from 2-4 p.m.

"It's nice to show our fans how hard we work," junior free safety Marcus Watts said. "Not many people know what it takes to become a Division I football player, so it's going to be nice to show them that we do work hard every day, and that it's not that easy."

By giving the students the chance over all other fans to watch the K-State football team practice, Prince said it will help create a positive relationship between the players and their fellow students.

"I want our players and our student body to really have a connection," Prince said. "They (the players) are doing their best to represent our student body."

Needless to say, the idea of watching football practice is an exciting proposition for some K-State students.

"I'm really excited to see the coaches and team in action," Aaron Mills, senior in horticulture, said. "With coach Bill Snyder, no one got to see any practice at all, but now, we get a front-row seat to the Prince era."

Mills said he and a group of friends plan to go to every practice they can, including the first one today.

"We're going to take a cooler full of food and soda and enjoy some K-State football," he said. "We'll definitely be watching to see what players impress us and who we think is slacking."

As for what those in the stands can expect to see, defensive coordinator Raheem Morris said K-State practices are full of energy.

"I hope they see coach Morris with a censored mouth," Morris said with a laugh. "We'll have a lot of fun. They'll see us running around. We've got a lively coaching staff.

"I haven't been around a coaching staff where everybody is a runner and a teacher and an up-in-your-face kind of guy and a motivator, but that's what we are, and we support achievement. We love it."

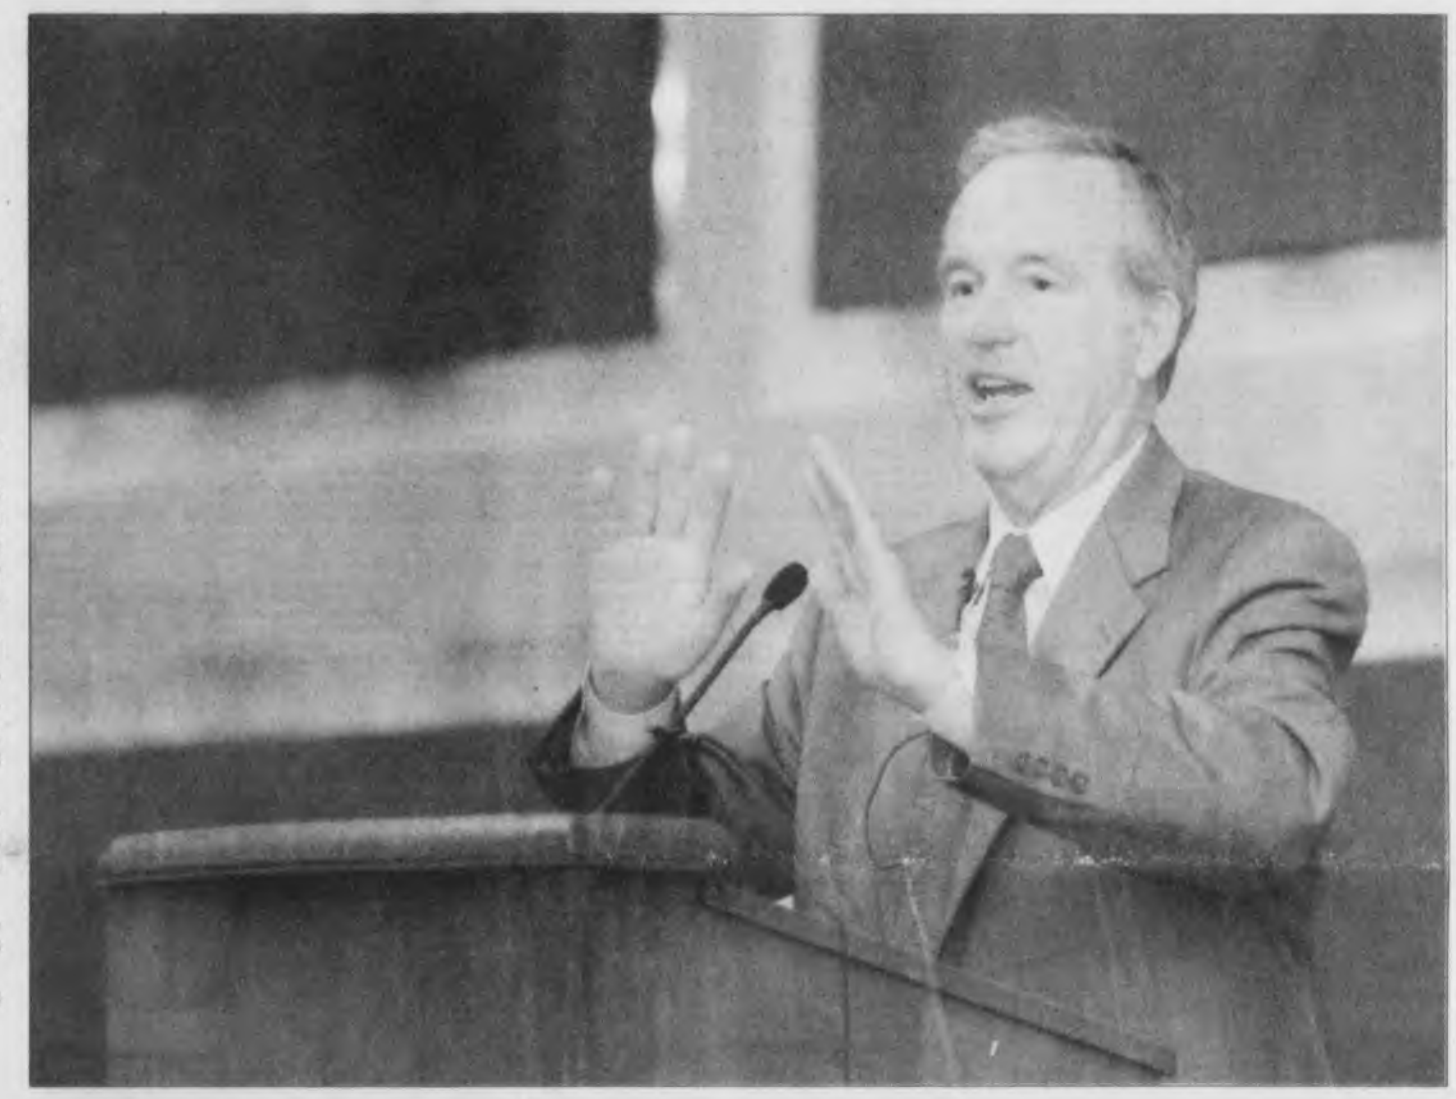
Former governor delivers civic lecture

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recent movement in the federal government to transfer more responsibility to the state level could be detrimental to state infrastructures, said John Carlin, former Kansas governor and visiting professor of political science.

"What if our Katrina, a devastating tornado, was all our responsibility," Carlin said.

When Hurricane Katrina struck, all eyes turned to the federal government to aid in disaster relief, Carlin said in a speech for the Institute for Civic Discourse and Democracy Lecture Series in Civic Discourse on Thursday at the K-State Alumni Center.



Kansas and other states have depended on the federal government for funding for many programs and the intent of many Congressional representatives is to downsize, shifting funding for infrastructure programs to state and local levels, Carlin said.

The argument used by some federal government officials that the closer government is to the people, the better it will be, is a valid argument, he said.

However, recent movements to cut taxes, at both state and federal levels, concerns him, Carlin said.

"We as a people want to believe there is such a thing as a free lunch," Carlin said.

Two students arrested Wednesday on drug charges after investigation

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Daniel Gibbons, junior in marketing, and Michael Scheer, junior in business administration pre-professional, were arrested on charges relating to an investigation into the distribution of marijuana in Manhattan, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

A search warrant was performed on Wednesday at 622 Bluemont Ave., where RCPD officers found a distributable amount of marijuana and pieces of drug paraphernalia.

The drug paraphernalia included digital gram scales, packaging materials and smoking devices.

Gibbons was charged with the sale of marijuana and possession of marijuana with the intent to distribute, both of which are felony charges.

He also was charged with possession of marijuana, which is a misdemeanor, and possession of drug paraphernalia, which is a felony and a misdemeanor.

Scheer was charged with possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia, both misdemeanors.

Bond for Gibbons was set at $3,000, and bond for Scheer was set at $1,000.

Silva arrested on federal warrant

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Albert Aurelio Silva II was arrested Wednesday by the Riley County Police Department on a federal warrant relating to a charge of conspiracy to distribute crack-cocaine, Lt. Timothy Hegarty of the RCPD said.

The arrest was part of Operation Little Apple, which took place in cooperation with state and federal authorities, Hegarty said.

"It was a very large drug investigation," he said.

Operation Little Apple started in 2004 and concluded in April 2005, Hegarty said.

Silva is being held at the Riley County Jail, awaiting United States Marshals, but Hegarty said he was unsure when they would arrive.

"I have no idea at this point," Hegarty said.

Silva could have been charged with conspiracy to distribute crack-cocaine without possessing the substance, Hegarty said.

"That is a distinct possibility," Hegarty said.

No bond was set for Silva.

Two Topeka detectives demoted for racially insensitive comments

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Topeka Police detectives Ken Eaton and George Campbell were demoted and suspended for making racially insensitive remarks in response to a newspaper column written by the president of the Topeka branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Corrective action has been taken by the Topeka Police Department by demoting Eaton and issuing a suspension without pay; neither Eaton nor Campbell is required to serve the suspension yet, John Frieden, attorney for Eaton and Campbell, said.

Eaton and Campbell are filing a suit requesting a reverse in disciplinary action, along with punitive and compensatory damages including attorney fees.

"The issue is whether or not the officers had the right to express their opinions on matters of public concern," Frieden said.

"Public employees are protected by the First Amendment in regards to public concerns," said Bill Rich, professor of law at Washburn University. "But they do not have absolute protection. There comes a point when police officers engage in speech that undermines their work and can be disciplined or even fired in some extreme cases."

Eaton and Campbell have broken the law enforcement code of ethics, Glenda Overstreet, Topeka NAACP president, said. Overstreet is the writer of the column on which Eaton and Campbell commented.

"By code, they should not provide their prejudices while serving and protecting the community," Overstreet said.

Overstreet's column was written about her experience in a Topeka courtroom hearing, which was conducted to determine sentencing for a young African-American man who had been tried on drug charges.

"Initially, Overstreet invited comment from the public," Frieden said.

After the column was printed, Eaton wrote a letter to the editor that was published in the Topeka Metro, Frieden said.

The letter included comments stating, "If it's so great in your 'homeland,' why are you still here?"

The Topeka Police Department got involved when Overstreet notified them that one of the e-mails she received was transmitted from a government computer, Frieden said.

"My guess is that Overstreet has received a numerous amount of responses, because she suggested that black people could not receive justice in a Shawnee County Courtroom," Frieden said.

E-mails sent from the police department rather than a private correspondent have less protection, Rich said.

"A lot of the info was not released yet because this is a personnel issue, and there is a pending lawsuit we cannot release," said Kristi Pankratz,

School finance debated

TOPEKA — Senators began Thursday to winnow down options for increasing aid to public schools, with conservative Republicans claiming that the debate was pushing the state toward big financial problems. On the Senate's debate calendar were a House-approved plan to phase in a $633 million increase in school funding over three years; Senate leaders' three-year, $660 million plan; and Sen. Jim Barnett's four-year, $495 million plan.

Carroll freed

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Wearing a green Islamic head scarf, American reporter Jill Carroll walked into an Iraqi political party office Thursday, set free nearly three months after being kidnapped in an ambush that killed her translator. "I was treated well, but I don't know why I was kidnapped," Carroll said on Baghdad television, only weeks after she appeared weeping in a video put out by kidnappers who had threatened to kill her.

Mine survivor released

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — Sago Mine survivor Randal McCloy Jr., looking thin and stiff but walking on his own, offered his gratitude Thursday as he was released from a hospital after almost three months. "I'd just like to thank everybody for their thoughts and prayers," McCloy said softly, wearing a baseball cap and a racing-team jacket at a morning news conference. He paused, then added with a weak smile, "I believe that's it."

Happy?

Recent Gallup Polls conducted in Great Britain, Canada, and the United States show that Britons are less likely to describe themselves as very happy than residents of the other two countries.

City-wide clean-up to begin next week

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan will have its annual Spring Clean-Up program Monday through Friday.

The city of Manhattan, in cooperation with local refuse contractors, will remove rubbish, tree limbs and branches, and yard waste from Manhattan residences.

The service is free for customers of the four refuse contractors working on the clean-up program, said Public Works Superintendent Jeff Walters.

Arrow Trash Service, B & L Trash Service, Joe Mallon Trash Service and Waste Management are the four providers.

Items that will not be picked up include major household appliances, tires, batteries or household hazardous waste, Walters said.

All yard waste, including grass clippings and leaves, must be in yard-waste bags, which can be found at local hardware stores. Any yard waste stored in other containers will not be collected, Walters said.

The yard waste must be placed on the curb and must be in a pile separate from limbs and branches. Yard waste, limbs and branches must be piled behind the curb by 8 a.m. on the scheduled pick-up day.

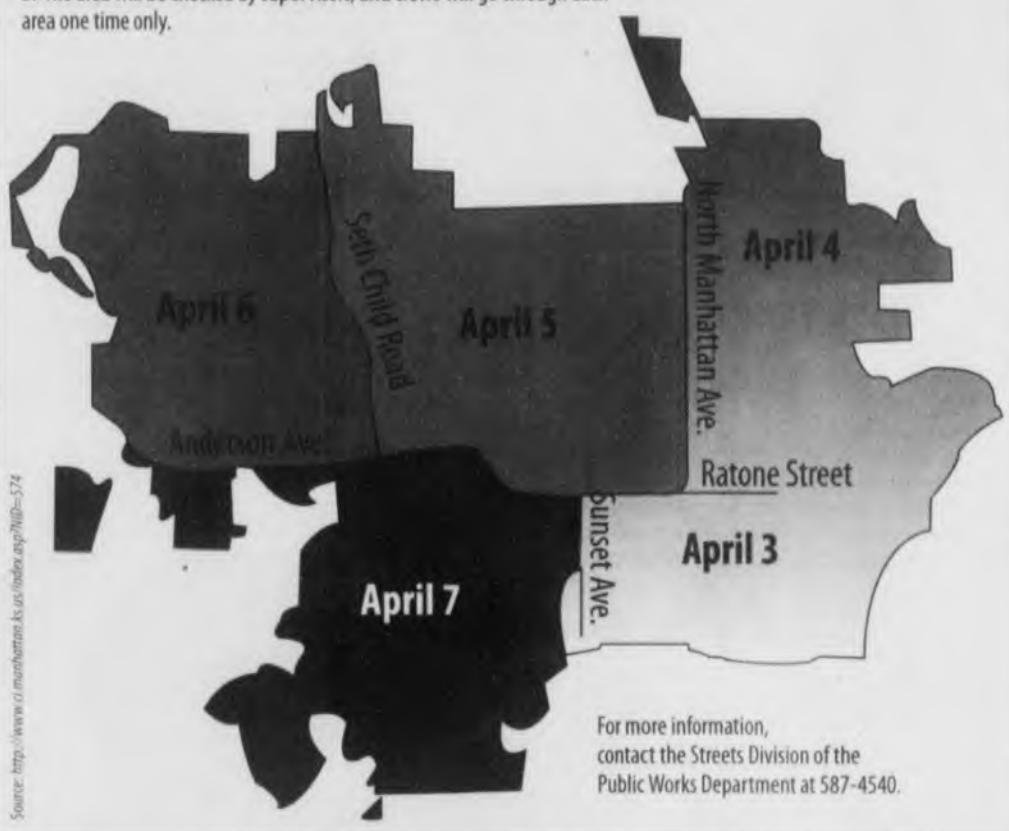
Any scrap lumber must be placed in a pile for refuse contractors and must be able to be loaded by one person.

The program promotes cleanliness in Manhattan, Walters said.

"It enables us to clean up a lot of things in the city that normally wouldn't get cleaned up, and it motivates people to clean things up that they normally wouldn't," Walters said.

Joe Mallon Trash Services also works with the program.

"One year they asked the haulers to help out, and it's just a good way to keep the trash cleaned up," said Joe Mallon, owner of Joe Mallon Trash Services.



B & L Trash Service has been working with Manhattan for the clean-up since the program was introduced.

"More people clean up stuff and get rid of stuff if they don't have to pay for it," said Diane Brummett, owner of B & L Trash Services. "We do it because we live in this community, too, and it just seems like the right thing to do."

Pick-up schedule

City of Manhattan crews will pick up yard waste, limbs and branches. The following Spring Clean-Up guidelines apply:

1. All yard waste (grass clippings and leaves) must be in yard-wastepaper bags. Yard waste in plastic bags or other containers will not be collected. Paper bags can be purchased at local retail stores.
2. Do not place limbs and branches in boxes or other types of containers.
3. Yard waste must be in a pile separate from limbs and branches and placed on the curb.
4. Piles of mixed yard waste, limbs and branches or other debris will not be picked up.
5. The area will be checked by supervisors, and crews will go through each area one time only.

Senate approves online vote posting to increase access

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A bill that would post specific votes cast by student senators on Student Governing Association's Web site passed with a 51-0-0 vote at Student Senate's Thursday night meeting.

According to the bill, senators' votes will be published in a Web link with the official minutes on SGA's Web site in an effort to make the information more accessible to the student body.

"I think it's common sense, and I think it will improve our ability to be transparent to the people we represent," Hersh said.

In other final action, a resolution to approve the 2006 SGA election results passed with unanimous consent.

Senate turnover for the 2006-07 term will take place during a second meeting on April 6.

In other business, a resolution concerning open periods at Senate meetings was introduced at Thursday's meeting.

Each regular meeting of Senate begins with an open period, and any person without speaking privileges can address Senate.

Individuals will be allowed 10 minutes unless extended by a majority vote.

According to the proposed resolution, those with speaking privileges may ask questions for a period lasting no more than five minutes unless extended by a majority vote after an open speaker concludes a presentation.

Emily Schmeidler, Senate parliamentarian, said current standing rules do not clarify what the open period consists of or how long the closing period is.

"The main thing that we wanted to do was to clarify the question period because that was the undefined term before," Schmeidler said.

The proposed resolution also states each speaker will be limited to five minutes unless extended by a majority vote for the open period at the end of a regular Senate meeting.

After an open period speaker has concluded a presentation, those with speaking privileges may ask a question for no longer than three minutes, and Senate may allow questions to continue for an additional two minutes if extended by majority vote, according to the proposed resolution.

"We felt that since beginning open period those speakers without speaking privileges are allowed to talk for five minutes and give five minute presentations, we felt like that same privilege be extended to senators," Brandon Sager, Senate Operations Committee chair, said.

TO THE POINT

Students should see athletics this weekend

This weekend, several incredible opportunities exist for K-State people on this campus to experience events previously unavailable to them.

Beginning at 4 p.m. today, K-State football practice will be open to students, faculty and staff for the first time in at least 17 years.

On Saturday, practice is open again after 2 p.m., this time to the entire public.

Then, at 7 tonight, the K-State women's basketball team meets up with Marquette at Bramlage Coliseum in the championship game of the Women's National Invitation Tournament.

It is the first-ever postseason tournament championship game the women's team has ever been in.

If you're not a football or basketball fan, and baseball is more your thing, then catch the Wildcat baseball team – off to its best start in school history – in action at Tointon Family Stadium at 6:30 tonight, 2 p.m. Saturday or 1 p.m. Sunday against No. 3 Nebraska. The Huskers are annually one of the best teams in the nation, so K-State wins could be huge for the program.

Open football practices, championship basketball and top-flight baseball all in one weekend has never happened at K-State before, and everyone who has the time to go should make an effort to support Wildcat athletics.

Don't let this opportunity pass you by.

The movie of life

Focusing on the moment makes time significant

CODY HOLUB

A Gestalt psychologist named Fritz Perls believed that most people live fantasy lives. They either live totally in the past, or in terms of what they expect in the future. This generally makes people fearful and uncertain about themselves.

Nevertheless, I might have stumbled upon a way to live a fantasy life closer to the present.

Perls developed something called the "Now Trip," which helps reground a person in the present. This counteracts the eroding feelings of fear, uncertainty, illusion and self-doubt associated with these future or past fantasies.

The main exercise of the "Now Trip" is to catalogue the information your senses are bringing you in the present moment.

The way you catalogue this information is to, basically, narrate your own life. Make successive internal statements that begin with the word "now." It sounds silly, but it works. For example: "Now I am talking to someone I like. Now I am feeling smooth. Now I notice my fly is unzipped. Now I feel like an idiot."

Hopefully your "Now Trip" experience is dissimilar and more successful than mine, but "now" you get the point.

Unfortunately, however, there is a lag that pervades our daily lives that makes us unable to fully live in the present – preventing us from living with a current alert awareness.

This lag, which is theoretically impossible to overcome, is called sensory lag.

This is the lag between the time your senses receive something, and the time you are able to react. One-thirtieth of a second, if you're the most alert person alive, and most people are a lot slower than that.

You can't, through sheer speed, overcome sensory lag. Essentially, we are always acting on what has just finished happening – we are all destined to spend the rest of our days watching a "movie of our lives."

Everybody, everywhere, has their own movie going, their own improvised script, their own scenario, their own character traits. In this movie, though, we don't get awarded for acting.

No, in this movie, the rewards go to those that act the least, that live genuinely, to those that are out-front and candid.

I'm going to call this movie "Forever Now." Imagine the opening scene with me.

The establishing shot is you reading the paper as you snap out of your distractions and start your "Now Trip." Then, it cuts away to different people living out their movie like mad: Some eating, some working, some sleeping, some crying, some laughing, some having an orgasm, some doing the latter two simultaneously and so on to infinity.

That's how it will begin. All the lights are set. All the "actors" are in place. Now the movie can begin. Ready ... action.

Sense of humor a dying art in today's society

MEGAN MOLITOR

Our increasingly uptight society is losing one of its characteristics that is essential to survival: the sense of humor.

It seems to me that nobody can take a joke. As much as "they" keep telling us we are becoming a vulgar and disgusting generation, the world seems awfully politically correct to me. And what's the fun in that?

I'm not saying it's a fabulous idea to push people out of wheelchairs or off of bikes and laugh at the destruction, but we should, however, allow ourselves a little room to breathe.

Hold the phone: things in life are funny. Life is funny.

It's OK to laugh at stupid things and make senseless, immature comments occasionally.

It keeps us young. My 16-year-old brother laughs every time a ketchup bottle makes that weird sound. Do I? No, but if it brightens his day, have at it.

I'm also becoming wary of the fact that this lack of a sense of humor is causing the human species to lessen its intelligence.

Allow me to elaborate.

I believe sarcasm is an insanely intelligent form of humor, and no matter how much of an annoyance it might be to others, it takes a quick mind to master its complexity.

Sarcasm comes in many forms. It can be in, say, a column, or those quick retorts to your mom that she never caught onto but made you giggle a little on the inside.

Those not playing with a full deck aren't usually the ones to lash out with witty one-liners. However, I raise my eyebrows at those that do not have the mental capacity to wrap their minds around the fact that sometimes, people aren't being serious. They're just joking.

Insane, I know.

If I were to say, "Hey, random person. How are you on this fine morning?", and you replied, "Oh just swell. My goldfish was sick and in my hurry to take him to the vet, I ran over my dog. Life gets better everyday," I probably would not take you literally. I would not pat you on the back, congratulate you on what I now believe is your idea of a good day. More than likely, I would recognize your comment as sarcasm. Not very good sarcasm, but a form, just the same.

I am surprised, however, to discover that there are many out there that walk a path of literality so straight there is no room to veer off, even for an instant.

They can't relax enough to realize the other person was simply saying the opposite of what they really meant in order to mock the truth and add satirical humor to the situation.

My advice to these poor individuals is simple. It's like the (slightly altered) saying goes, if something seems too backwards and ironic to be true, it probably is. Sarcasm is an incredible tool.

Perhaps a tool of the bitter and irritated but a great tool of persuasion and making a point, when used correctly. One can only hope that they find the audience necessary and with the capabilities of absorbing, processing and understanding the hopefully humorous bit of sarcasm laid before them.

Program informs, unifies women on rape mindset

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildcats Against Rape (W.A.R.) facilitated a program called "The Art of Rape" Thursday night.

The event included poetry recitals from members of the organization, modern statistics, a video and a speech by keynote speaker Mary Todd, assistant director of the K-State Women's Center.

"We all have different opinions, but I'm hoping that by the end of the night we'll have a unified consensus on some things," Todd said.

The three main topics Todd covered in her speech were the criminal mindset, the victim's point of view and the culture that allows both.

"A person with a sociopathic personality can be spotted," she said. "They express similar traits such as the inability to accept blame, a self-centered attitude and the ability to lie in the face of the obvious."

Sociopathic tendencies can be present in different people in different degrees.

"It's a continuum," Todd said. "People can possess some of the traits but don't necessarily have them all. Self-pity is the strongest genuine emotion present in a sociopath."

"Most people overlook what a massive event it is to report a crime to the police," she said.

Todd also presented ideas for ways to ease the pressure of reporting crimes.

"What if we had a national day of reporting?" Todd said.

Many members of the audience said they found relevant information in the presentation.

"This information is important for us women," said Jessie Stone, a female audience member. "I'll take with me a greater sense of empathy and precaution."

The audience was diverse and included members of both genders.

"I came because I want to be a part of the solution and also because I have friends who have been assaulted," John Caton, senior in pre-psychology, said.

Cottan Simms, junior in sociology, said he was inspired by the event.

"At first I didn't really want to be here, but now I'm glad that I was a part of it and am actually mad that every man and woman I know wasn't here," Simms said.

Simms said he wants this information to be more available to students.

"I think this presentation should be promoted in the fraternities and sororities around campus," he said. "If it's a matter of funding, then an effort needs to be made to get the organization more money."

Simms also said he feels an obligation to promote education of the situation.

"It can't be a one-way street," Simms said. "Guys need to point out this information to the women in their life and help them become less vulnerable. It starts with us."

Todd said the nature of the crime is part of the problem.

"Many people think this crime is so vile because it violates something that is so spiritual and mysterious," Todd said. "It's a crime about power and selfishness."

While speaking at "The Art of Rape" event Thursday evening, Kelly Maze, junior in pre-nursing, reads a letter to attendees she had planned to read to the man she accused of raping her.

Anderson road construction to last 1 year

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Road construction on Anderson Avenue began Monday on the south side of street on the project's west side, near the Seth Child Road interchange.

Rob Ott, city engineer, said the main intent of construction is to take the street from a four-lane street to a five-lane.

"We're widening to the north and south to accommodate for a center, 12-foot wide turn lane," he said.

Ott said construction would last for nine to 12 months.

While several segments of the area will be worked on simultaneously, Ott said it is hard to say how many blocks will be under construction at one time.

"There's going to be activity all along the entire southern portion for several months," he said.

At the beginning of construction, traffic will be moved to the north and later shifted to the south. At the final leg of construction, Ott said the crew will work on the middle of the road.

Along with the Anderson Avenue project, Ott said minor changes will be made to the interchange near Seth Child Road to improve the on- and off-ramps and the turning radius.

While additional changes are being made, Ott said the project will focus on Anderson Avenue.

"We're not tearing the bridge down," he said. "This is not an interchange project. It's an Anderson project."

Ott said the city is trying to heighten awareness among the public driving conditions, but challenges with traffic still are expected.

"What will be a challenge will be, 'How do I go to such-and-such business,'" he said. "It will be different. There's going to be changes, and any time you change things, people are creatures of habit, and that's why we're trying to keep people aware."

Delays in construction have been mentioned, but Gary Fees, city clerk and communications manager, said those are mostly due to weather and traffic.

"I think it's more weather-related," he said. "Some will depend on getting traffic through."

Traffic on Anderson will be reduced to three lanes, with one lane for both east- and west-bound traffic and a turning lane. Fees said traffic will be reduced to one lane in some areas.

Jessica Richardson, senior in interior design, said she has not run into much hassle from construction on Anderson Avenue. But from past experience, she said she wasn't looking forward to dealing with traffic.

"I've run into it before when they've done it there, and it's kind of congested and hard to get in and out of businesses," Richardson said. "I'd personally try to find some other place to go if I could or find another route."

Far from ordinary

MARK POTTER

A member of Delta Upsilon fraternity, Smith is majoring in accounting. He grew up near the small town of Garfield, Kan., located about 180 miles from Manhattan.

Smith's mother is a teacher, and his father works as a commodities broker and farmer. Like most college students, he enjoys relaxing and hanging out with friends.

Aside from his long hair and beard, you might be fooled into thinking Smith is a normal guy.

He won the mile run at the 2006 NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships with a time of 4:12.75.

By doing so, he became the first Wildcat since 1993 to win an indoor national championship.

But the remarkable part is Smith did not concentrate on the mile before this season. Until recently, he focused on the 800-meter run.

"This is the first year I have really committed to the mile," Smith said. "A week or two before (the NCAA Indoor Championships), I was questioning whether I still wanted to run it anymore."

Even crazier is the fact that Smith's best race is not the mile, or even the 800.

Smith broke the national record in the 1,000 at the Husker Invitational on Feb. 4 with a blistering time of 2:19.57. The previous record of 2:19.64 had stood for 20 years.

For his effort, Smith became the first K-State athlete ever to be named Midwest NCAA Division I Men's Indoor Athlete of the Year.

With any luck, the world will have a chance to watch him run at the 2008 Olympic Games in Beijing, China.

"A lot of things would have to go my way," Smith said. "I'd have to be able to train without serious injury. I think if everything goes right, I have a good chance at qualifying."

However, the Olympics don't offer the mile or the 1,000, so Smith will have to settle for the 1,500-meter run.

No problem, Smith said.

"(The 1,500) is a better race for me than the mile anyway," he said.

The Olympic Trials are nothing new for Smith.

Two years ago, he tried to qualify for the Athens games in the 800. He nearly qualified for the finals, but came up short.

"I was ninth, and they only took the top eight," he said.

Who knows, if Smith shaves his head for the 2008 Olympic Trails, he'll probably gain the slight edge he needs to become an Olympian.

But for now, he's unwilling to compromise more than a couple inches.

"I told people I might cut it, but I kind of backed out on it," Smith said. "I cut a couple inches off probably around January, and it's about time I shorten it again."

K-State tennis ready for Big 12 opponents

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team is past the point of no return.

The Wildcats (6-6, 2-2) are too far into the season to worry about fixing anything big.

K-State has been neither impressive nor disappointing, coach Steve Bietau said.

"There are not any big things left," Bietau said. "The big things we took care of in the fall, or they are big things that we cannot take care of, because they are not going to get fixed right now."

The little things will be vital in gaining an edge for the rest of the season, Bietau said.

"We are just trying to tune things up," he said. "The biggest thing right now is that we have our head in the right place and a clear picture of what we need to do."

Lately, the Wildcats have had trouble in close matches, with their last four losses coming by a score of 4-3.

Bietau said his team needs to find an edge with so many teams playing tight matches.

"These matches are just so competitive," Bietau said. "You look at all the 4-3 matches we have had, and I really think there is 50 or 60 teams in the country that could all win against each other at a given time."

The Wildcats had a five-day vacation from tennis over spring break, and freshman Katerina Kudlackova said the break was well-deserved.

"We played like every day for three months, so it was nice to get a break," Kudlackova said.

So far, the change has been apparent, sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia said.

"When we went into the spring break everyone was exhausted from matches, school, and tests, and it was really bad," Kvaratskhelia said. "Now everybody is feeling really fresh."

Senior Jessica Simosa has lost her last three matches in split sets, but despite some initial frustration, she said she will continue to play hard.

"I lost, but I played well, so I am OK with that," Simosa said.

In doubles, none of the teams are doing anything to be considered a true No. 1 team, Bietau said.

"You could say that we have three No. 2 doubles teams," Bietau said.

K-State will take on Iowa State and Oklahoma for two home matches this weekend.

Iowa State (3-6, 0-4) is yet to win a Big 12 match, and Oklahoma has lost three of its last four matches.

Wildcats prepare for home test against No. 3 Cornhuskers

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will take on the Nebraska Cornhuskers in the opener of a three-game series at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Huskers (18-4, 2-1) are ranked third in the Collegiate Baseball poll, and boast one of the strongest pitching staffs in the Big 12 Conference, including All-American Joba Chamberlain, who is 3-1 with a 1.32 earned run average.

"I think Nebraska's pitching is kind of the negater; their three starters are as good as anybody in the conference," coach Brad Hill said. "(The games) are probably going to be low-scoring affairs – we're going to hope for low-scoring from a pitching-defense standpoint – and we're going to have to not give them extra outs during the inning, and have to compete really hard at the plate, because again, their pitchers are as good as there is in the conference."

K-State coach Brad Hill will look to lead his 19-3 Wildcats in a three-game set against Nebraska this weekend at Tointon Family Stadium.

Hill said he hopes his team can pick up their level of play from how it has been in the Wildcats' last four games, including two losses to Big 12 opponent Missouri.

He said breakdowns on defense were the biggest problem plaguing the Wildcats, and they weren't able to make the kind of plays that they have earlier in the season.

"And then we made, I think, four errors against Chicago State too, so we really need to clean that up a bit, particularly when you're playing against a team like Nebraska or a team like Missouri," Hill said. "They expose you if you make errors, and then they're going to capitalize on that. With the teams in the Big 12, you just can't make too many mistakes."

Sophomore first baseman Matt Marasco said he is looking forward to the series, and even though K-State has had some problems, he still feels confident in their defensive ability.

"We still have a lot of great guys out there to play defense, and we'll definitely get that done," Marasco said.

Marasco said it is important for the Wildcats to get in the habit of playing hard and winning some games in the Big 12, and for that they will have to continue to raise their level of play.

"Each weekend's important, and we definitely want to come ready to play each day – Friday, Saturday and Sunday," he said.

Sophomore Brad Hutt, who is 4-0 this season with a 3.06 ERA, will be the starting pitcher tonight. Two of Hutt's wins came against Wichita State and Missouri, arguably the two best teams the Wildcats have faced this season.

Hutt said he hasn't looked at tonight's game any differently than he has any other.

"It's just a matter of me and my catcher, Brandon Farr, being on the same page," Hutt said. "He knows what their tendencies are, and he's going to relay that to me. The main thing is to just stay with them myself, and not try and do something special."

Track heads to UTEP Invitational hoping to continue success

By Chris Carpenter
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State track squad will travel to El Paso, Texas, for the UTEP Springtime Invitational at the University of Texas-El Paso this Saturday. The meet will be team-scored and will feature teams from UTEP, Iowa, Texas Tech and New Mexico State (women).

Coach Cliff Rovelto said he was encouraged by last week's meet, adding that track events were performing well so far.

"There were some good performances on the field as well," he said. "But on the track we're continuing to get faster, and I think that's a real bright spot."

Last year at the UTEP Invite, the Wildcats won nine event titles and had two athletes qualify for the NCAA Midwest Regional. Seniors Kyle Lancaster (high jump) and Breanna Eveland (pole vault) both set school records at the meet last year.

Lancaster and Eveland are ranked on the March 27th edition of the International Association of Athletics Federation's world rankings, with Lancaster at 28th and Eveland at 42nd.

"The future is bright with our women's team," said Rovelto. "Regardless of what we add in the future, the young core we have is going to be pretty good."

Sophomore Laci Heller improved on her qualifying throw from last week at the Jim Click Shoot-Out with a throw of 183 feet, 9 inches to move past Loren Groves for the longest throw in the hammer throw in the young season. Heller has now thrown past 180 feet in 12 of 14 competitions.

Senior Christian Smith qualified in his first outdoor meet for the third straight year last week, winning the 800-meter run in 1:49.59. The Garfield, Kan. native won the national indoor title in the mile run this year, is the collegiate record-holder in the 1,000-meter indoor run and a multiple Big 12 Conference Athlete of the Week.

"I think our men's team has a bright future as well," Rovelto said.

MLB | Baseball launches steroid investigation

NEW YORK — The alleged steroid use by Barry Bonds and other players will be investigated by Major League Baseball, and former Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell will lead the effort.

Bonds

"Nothing is more important to me than the integrity of the game of baseball," commissioner Bud Selig said Thursday.

Selig's decision to launch the probe, first reported by ESPN, came in the wake of "Game of Shadows," a book by two San Francisco Chronicle reporters detailing alleged extensive steroid use by Bonds and other baseball stars.

No matter what the findings of an investigation, it would be difficult for baseball to penalize anyone for steroids used before Sept. 30, 2002, when a joint drug agreement between management and the players' association took effect.

CFB | Rockne remembered on anniversary of death

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Fourteen-year-old Easter Heathman may have been one of the few people in America who didn't know of Knute Rockne when a plane carrying the Notre Dame football coach crashed into a pasture near the boy's Kansas home 75 years ago.

Heathman, now 89, didn't know anything about Rockne or Notre Dame when a loud noise rose in the distance on the morning of March 31, 1931. The boy's uncle then called, saying he had seen a wing fall off after the plane emerged from clouds.

Over the years, Heathman has become the unofficial caretaker of the crash site near Bazaar, Kan., and the monument that was built there. He and others plan to gather today to commemorate the life of Rockne and the seven others who died.

NASCAR officials have signed a new lease that will keep racing there through the year 2054. The lease will also raise the rent they pay for the famed speedway, which is now about equivalent to the cost of a one-bedroom apartment.

Under the deal, Daytona International Speedway's annual rent payments for 447 acres of public land jumps from the $10,000 established in 1957 to help get the racetrack built to $500,000 with regular future increases.

Hero or villain?

"V for Vendetta"
Movie review by Christina Hansen

"V for Vendetta" is a harrowing thriller that boasts a healthy dose of style and substance.

Based on the 1989 graphic novel by Alan Moore and David Lloyd, the film version of "V for Vendetta" explores hot-button political issues including national security, terrorism and government surveillance that are just as relevant today.

The film is set in London in the not-too-distant future, where a totalitarian regime instills fear and obedience into the heart of every citizen.

The once-powerful United States is spiraling into ruin, and a deadly chemical plague has left an ugly scar of fear and uncertainty on the public consciousness. Citizens who defy the government, live an alternative lifestyle or possess a contraband work of art disappear, never to be heard from again.

In this climate of turmoil and fear, mild-mannered Evey Hammond (Natalie Portman) wishes only to avoid the government's attention. She succeeds until she ventures out past curfew one night and is rescued from a terrifying encounter by a mysterious masked man, who identifies himself only as V.

A disarmingly charismatic gentleman one moment and swift executioner the next, V (Hugo Weaving) inspires both fear and fascination in the timid Evey. At his invitation, she witnesses a bold act of terrorism against the nation's government that will change her life forever.

Transformed from an ordinary citizen to a public enemy overnight, Evey is pulled deeper and deeper into V's developing revolution and becomes acquainted with the man and all of his puzzling contradictions.

Evey is forced to choose whether she will return to the relative quiet and safety of an anonymous existence or become part of the growing revolution to overcome the ruthless government's tyranny and lies.

Directed by James McTeigue (the Matrix trilogy), "V for Vendetta" boasts powerful performances from all of its actors, most notably from Portman and Weaving.

Portman makes Evey's transformation from frightened victim to fearless revolutionary both heartbreaking and believable. Weaving transcends his character's expressionless mask to give complexity and a deep vulnerability to the magnetic vigilante V.

It is a cautionary tale about the dangers of sacrificing freedom for security and a lone man risking his life to restore justice and sanity to a world gone terribly awry.

The film's biggest question may be: do the ends truly justify the means? A man kills and destroys, but to realize the higher goal of toppling a cruel and tyrannical government. Is he a hero or a villain?

Filmmakers leave this question for the audience to decide in this, one of the year's best and most thought-provoking thrillers.

WEIGHING IN

A column by Carl Brown

While some readers will disagree with me, I feel there is little stress involved with college.

Let me explain. First, I will say that throughout college and life in the military, I have come to learn the only stress in life is what I bring into it.

In other words, you can only stress over things you have control over. The instructors are not bringing the stress – we are.

So the first question is, what do I have control over as a student?

As students, we have control over our grade point average and our finances — you will never get rid of financial stress, by the way.

What makes us stress out over these things is our time management, or lack thereof.

We have choices in our busy schedules, where some of us go to classes and then work at a job. During breaks we can do homework or study, which most of us have a tendency not to do.

In many cases the "stress" I hear from classmates is from instructors giving out too much homework. In this case I have to say no.

I find that many of us have a tendency to put things off until the last minute. This will show up in your GPA in the form of bad grades.

In previous classes, I have seen students sending text messages to friends on their phones instead of listening to the lecture. I have seen students with laptops who are typing notes and instant messaging friends. These same students later complain about the test grade they received and complain the instructor is bad. These same students will "stress out" over their GPA because of these grades.

They have the control to not text or IM friends and listen to the lectures.

There also is the trend of going to Aggieville and partying every night and then trying to do homework right before class. The quality of work shows up in our grades.

To relieve your "stress," try to set a goal – for example, don't go out or party until all homework or studying for a test is done. If it cannot be done in one night, set the goal of no partying, or for that matter, going out to relieve that hormonal build-up, until the homework and studying for that test is done.

Take control of the things you can control and don't pass the buck to the instructors.

It is in your hands. So I say, "Do what your GPA can handle."

Your "stress" will disappear, and you will have a happier experience in college and still have time for all the fun you want.

Invitation for a championship

Wildcats meet Golden Eagles for WNIT title

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's basketball team has a chance to do something no other K-State basketball team has done when it takes on Marquette at 7 tonight in the championship game of the Women's National Invitation Tournament in Bramlage Coliseum: win a postseason tournament championship.

Freshman Shalee Lehning said the possibility of being a champion was why she came to K-State.

"When you come to a team to play, that's something that you want," Lehning said. "You want to compete on a team that competes for championships, and Kansas State is giving me that opportunity. It's just a wonderful opportunity to take home a title."

Coach Deb Patterson said she couldn't think of a better situation for her team, which is playing in its fifth-consecutive home game of the tournament.

"I could not have even dreamed of an outcome this positive for a basketball team," Patterson said. "What we have found is that from the enthusiasm, the fun and the energy that we've been able to generate and experience from our fans during this tournament, we could not have asked for a better scenario. I think this far surpasses anything that we would have experienced in the NCAA Tournament."

Like the Wildcats (23-10), the Golden Eagles (22-10) will play in their first-ever WNIT championship game after defeating Pittsburgh 77-64 on Monday.

Marquette is led by freshman Krystal Ellis and junior Christina Quaye. Ellis is averaging 17.5 points a game in the WNIT, while Quaye has registered two double-doubles in the tournament and is averaging 11 points per game.

Patterson said Marquette might not be as athletic as other teams the Wildcats have faced in the WNIT, but they will be tough to beat.

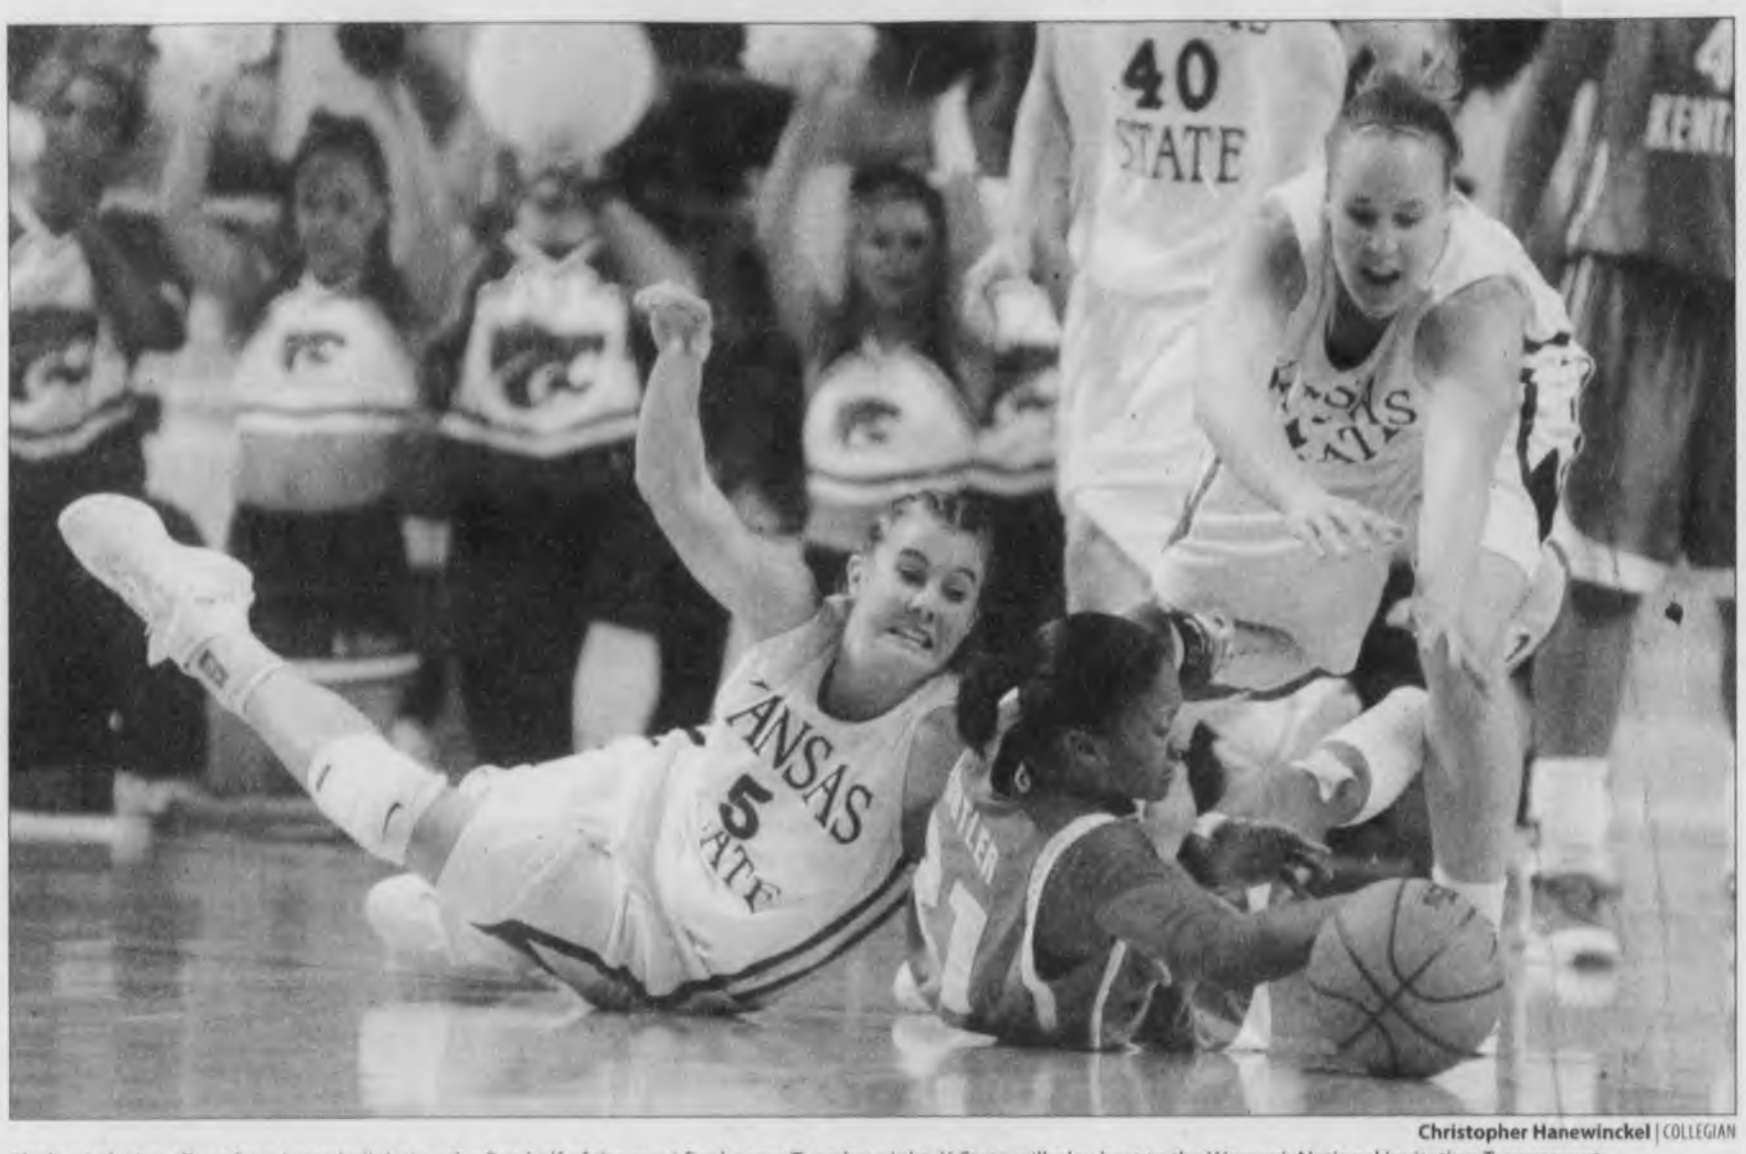
"They're not going to blow you away with their athleticism, like Western Kentucky or Fresno, but they can beat anybody in the country," Patterson said.

Junior Claire Coggins said despite the magnitude of a championship game, K-State will take the same approach they have all season.

"It's just another game," Coggins said. "Obviously, it's the championship game and it's big, but once you walk in between the lines, it's the same 40-minute game. There might be some nerves, but we will work it out."

Throughout the tournament, the Wildcats have relied on turnovers. In the previous four games, opponents have averaged 18.8 turnovers per game, and the Wildcats have averaged scoring 22.8 points per game off of those turnovers.

"There's only two teams in the country to get to leave their season happy, and we want to be one of those teams."



Claire Coggins
FORWARD

Lehning said K-State will leave everything on the floor tonight in front of a near sell-out crowd.

"We're just a bunch of fighters, and we are not going to give up," Lehning said. "In previous games this season, when we've lost in the final seconds, it wasn't because we weren't fighting – it was a lack of experience. We are willing to do whatever it takes to win this game, and we are not going to go down without a fight."

Coggins said the Wildcats are excited about the opportunity.

"There's only two teams in the country to get to leave their season happy, and we want to be one of those teams," Coggins said.

Patterson finishing 10th year as K-State head coach

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN
K-State coach Deb Patterson shouts from the bench during the semifinal game against Western Kentucky. Tonight Patterson will coach her first national championship game since starting at K-State.

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Leaning against the scorer's table after Thursday's practice in Bramlage Coliseum, coach Deb Patterson fielded questions from the barrage of media that has descended on the women's team before its Women's National Invitation Tournament championship game.

Patterson takes it all in stride. Affectionately known as Coach P to her players, Patterson has helmed K-State's women's basketball team for 10 years.

"First of all, I feel like it's more like three or four," Patterson said. "I don't feel like I've gotten any older since I've been here. I know I don't look like it – just kidding. I can't even believe I've been here this long, and the experience with this team this year has been as rewarding and fulfilling as any that I can remember being here. I think that's the reality of coaching.

"When you're coaching great, young people and when they're bringing great passion and great intensity and when they're working hard and when they're getting better, that's really what brings me the greatest sense of fulfillment."

When she first took the reins at K-State, Patterson inherited a program that finished the 1995-96 season at 14-16. In the six seasons and three coaches prior to Patterson, the Wildcats had a .434 winning percentage.

Patterson's first season saw the beginning of the turnaround for the K-State women. In that 1996-97 season, the Cats won 19 of their 31 games to boast a .613 winning percentage.

"I want them to talk about how, in 10 years, this program went from 196th in the country to one that's rated in the top 25 in the country; one that won a Big 12 Championship; one in which players were developed and made the transition into the WNBA; one in which we brought quality student athletes into and out of our program every single year; one in which, with a very young team, we, against all odds and against all expectations, advanced to the championship game of the WNIT; one in which we put this program on the face of the women's basketball map, not just in the Big 12 but nationally," she said.

Patterson is ranked as the second winningest coach in K-State women's basketball history with 198 wins. The top spot on that list is currently occupied by Judy Akers, who won 206 games during her tenure as coach from 1968 to 1979. Patterson only needs nine victories to secure that top spot.

"To me, when I think about that, my mind immediately goes to the players that are going to step on the court ... that are going to compete that game and to the coaches that have been a part of my staff who have helped develop those players, the players that have stepped on the floor in the 10 years that I've been here and who are responsible for those victories and the coaches who've worked to hard," Patterson said. "It's all about the people that you're surrounded by, and that's really what I think about the most."

Freshman Shalee Lehning also knows about setting records. Lehning broke both the freshman-season assist record of 157 and the school single-season assist record of 175.

Lehning said she has the utmost respect for her coach both on and off the court and playing for Patterson has been "an absolute blessing."

"She's such a great role model and great example," Lehning said. "It's been an honor playing for her because day in and day out they demand the best from us, yet they're caring. She is so knowledgeable and knows how to get the job done."

When asked what she thought of her coach's legacy at K-State, Lehning said Patterson had secured a place at K-State.

"She'll never be forgotten here," Lehning said. "She's only going to continue making things better here in this program. She's one that demands for us to continue getting better and to rise. She'll never settle for anything less than your best, and that's what true champions are, and she really is in all of our eyes. She's our hero."

Looking more directly at the WNIT championship game against Marquette, junior Claire Coggins said Patterson and the entire coaching staff have worked hard getting the team ready for games.

"(Patterson) brings a great energy to the court," Coggins said. "She brings a great attitude to the court. It just keeps us going, it keeps us in check for the games, and that's the most important thing to me and to our team, because she's our coach and we look to her for leadership.

"I think she's going to continue to be successful. We've been successful this year, and we're looking to get our team and her a championship."

Patterson said she has coached some big games at K-State including a 2002 double-overtime 80-76 win against Texas in Austin and also the first sellout of Bramlage under her watch, which came during a 2002 win over Nebraska, and winning the Big 12 Championship in 2004.

"This will rank as possibly one of the top five or six," she said. "It takes a lot for me to really label a game that big and that special."

She also offered one quick thought about tonight's game.

"Have fun – these are the days," she said. "It doesn't get any better than finding yourself in a championship game. Have fun."

Q. Not many seniors get the chance to be the only one honored on senior night. So, tell us the truth – you planned that, right?
A. "Of course. I was like, 'Coach P, (Deb Patterson) you only need to sign me.' No, it just happened that I was the only one in my class, and we didn't have any junior college transfers come in. It was hard at first, but my teammates were great all four years."

Q. Best moment in a Wildcat uniform?
A. "Hopefully it will be tomorrow night, but it would probably be the Texas Tech game last year. It was an amazing win for us."

Q. Why architectural engineering?
A. "I'm really good at math, and I didn't know what to do with that. So I decided to go into engineering, and I talked to Chuck Burton and he had a passion for it, and he said I could do great and I have."

Q. Favorite music to listen to before a game?
A. "Whatever is on stereo in our locker room. I really don't get much of a say in that one. Marlies (Gipson) and Danielle (Zanotti) take care of that."

Q. Any habits your teammates give you static for?
A. "They always give me crap for talking to my left hand when I miss a left-handed shot."

Q. What's it been like to play against your sister, Jackie McFarland of Colorado?
A. "It's been so much fun. I'm just glad that we won all four times against her."

Q. Which McFarland throws a more vicious elbow?
A. "I think I do. I've actually knocked people's teeth out, and she hasn't."

Q. Who's the funniest person on the team?
A. "Dietz is hilarious, because she is spastic."

CARLIN | Speech focuses on party splits

Attendees listen to John Carlin's speech Thursday afternoon. Carlin spoke to the audience about his concern for the change in government toward more state-level control rather than federal control and about partisanship.

Steven Doll
COLLEGIAN

While the federal government has the ability to tax people in every state, individual states do not have those resources, Carlin said.

If funding of infrastructures were to be transferred to state and local levels in Kansas, it would not be feasible to tax citizens and gain the amount of funding needed to maintain these programs, he said.

"We don't have the wealth to tax," Carlin said.

The reason for the debate about returning fiscal responsibility to states is due, in part, to an increase in partisanship in government, Carlin said.

Carlin said that while former President Dwight D. Eisenhower was in office, Texas Democrats were in charge of both the U.S. House and Senate.

At that time, there was no thought to undermine the president simply because he was of another party, Carlin said.

When former Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., was in office, Dole often said there was a limited window of opportunity to get things done in Congress before the next election, Carlin said.

Politics has become so partisan, politicians only think as far as the next election, he said.

The use of wedge issues like abortion distract from discussions of other matters, he said. Wedge issues should be discussed, but should not dominate discourse.

"We, the people, have to talk, discuss, question," he said.

Local government also needs to look for change and efficiency, Carlin said.

Politicians have become partisan because they have been driven into these positions, and action to change and start civil discourse has to start with the people, Carlin said. If the people demand civil discourse and push their representatives to stop using wedge issues, elected officials and candidates for office will listen, he added.

One issue being avoided is the move to shift federal funding to the state level, he said.

"Until we as a people rise up and start asking questions, nothing will change," Carlin said.

He suggested bringing a list of issues when meeting a representative, instead of allowing all debate to be narrowed down to wedge issues.

"I was interested in what Mr. Carlin had to say," said Mark Nelson, sophomore in philosophy and pre-law.

Nelson said he thought Carlin answered questions to the best of his ability, considering the time constraints.

"We have a lot of work to do," Nelson said.

Hutt said he feels good about how the team will perform and thinks his teammates are excited to face such a competitive opponent as well, a sentiment echoed by Marasco.

"Nebraska's going to be a good opponent for us. They're a pretty strong team, but every weekend's like that in the Big 12, so we've just gotta come ready to play each weekend and do our best no matter who we're playing, to go out there and get a win each time," Marasco said.

With the Women's National Invitation Tournament championship being played tonight at Bramlage Coliseum just half an hour after the first pitch, the Wildcat baseball team could see a lower attendance than usual, but Hill said he wasn't too concerned.

"Obviously, it needs to be a packed house over there, because (the women's basketball team is) playing for a championship," Hill said. "We're proud of what they've done and excited for them, and we need to take care of business out here ourselves. It doesn't matter if there's 50 people out here or 500 or whatever; we need to go out and play (today) with much more energy and enthusiasm than I feel like we played with Tuesday and Wednesday."

The final two games of the series will be at 2 p.m. Saturday and 1 p.m. Sunday, at Tointon.

DETECTIVES | Eaton, Campbell will not comment

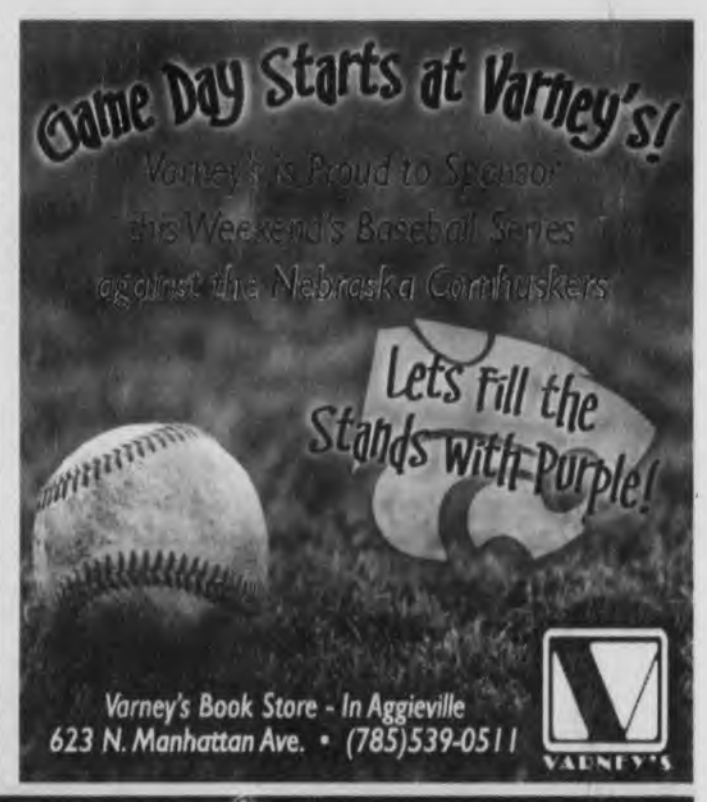
Topeka Police Department spokesperson.



Frieden said Eaton and Campbell cannot make a statement while matters are still pending.

"The courts will review and determine whether his rights were infringed on," Overstreet said. "We have certain rights also as individuals, but we also have a right to be protected by our police in an unbiased and non-racially motivated way."

In a released statement, Interim Chief Steve Harsha said the officers' opinions do not reflect the views of the department as a whole.

"The views expressed in the editorial, as well as those in the e-mails, are not those of the Chief of Police, the Topeka Police Department or the City of Topeka," he said.

WOMEN'S NATIONAL INVITATION TOURNAMENT CHAMPIONSHIP

Cats net postseason title

K-State captures WNIT championship before sold-out crowd

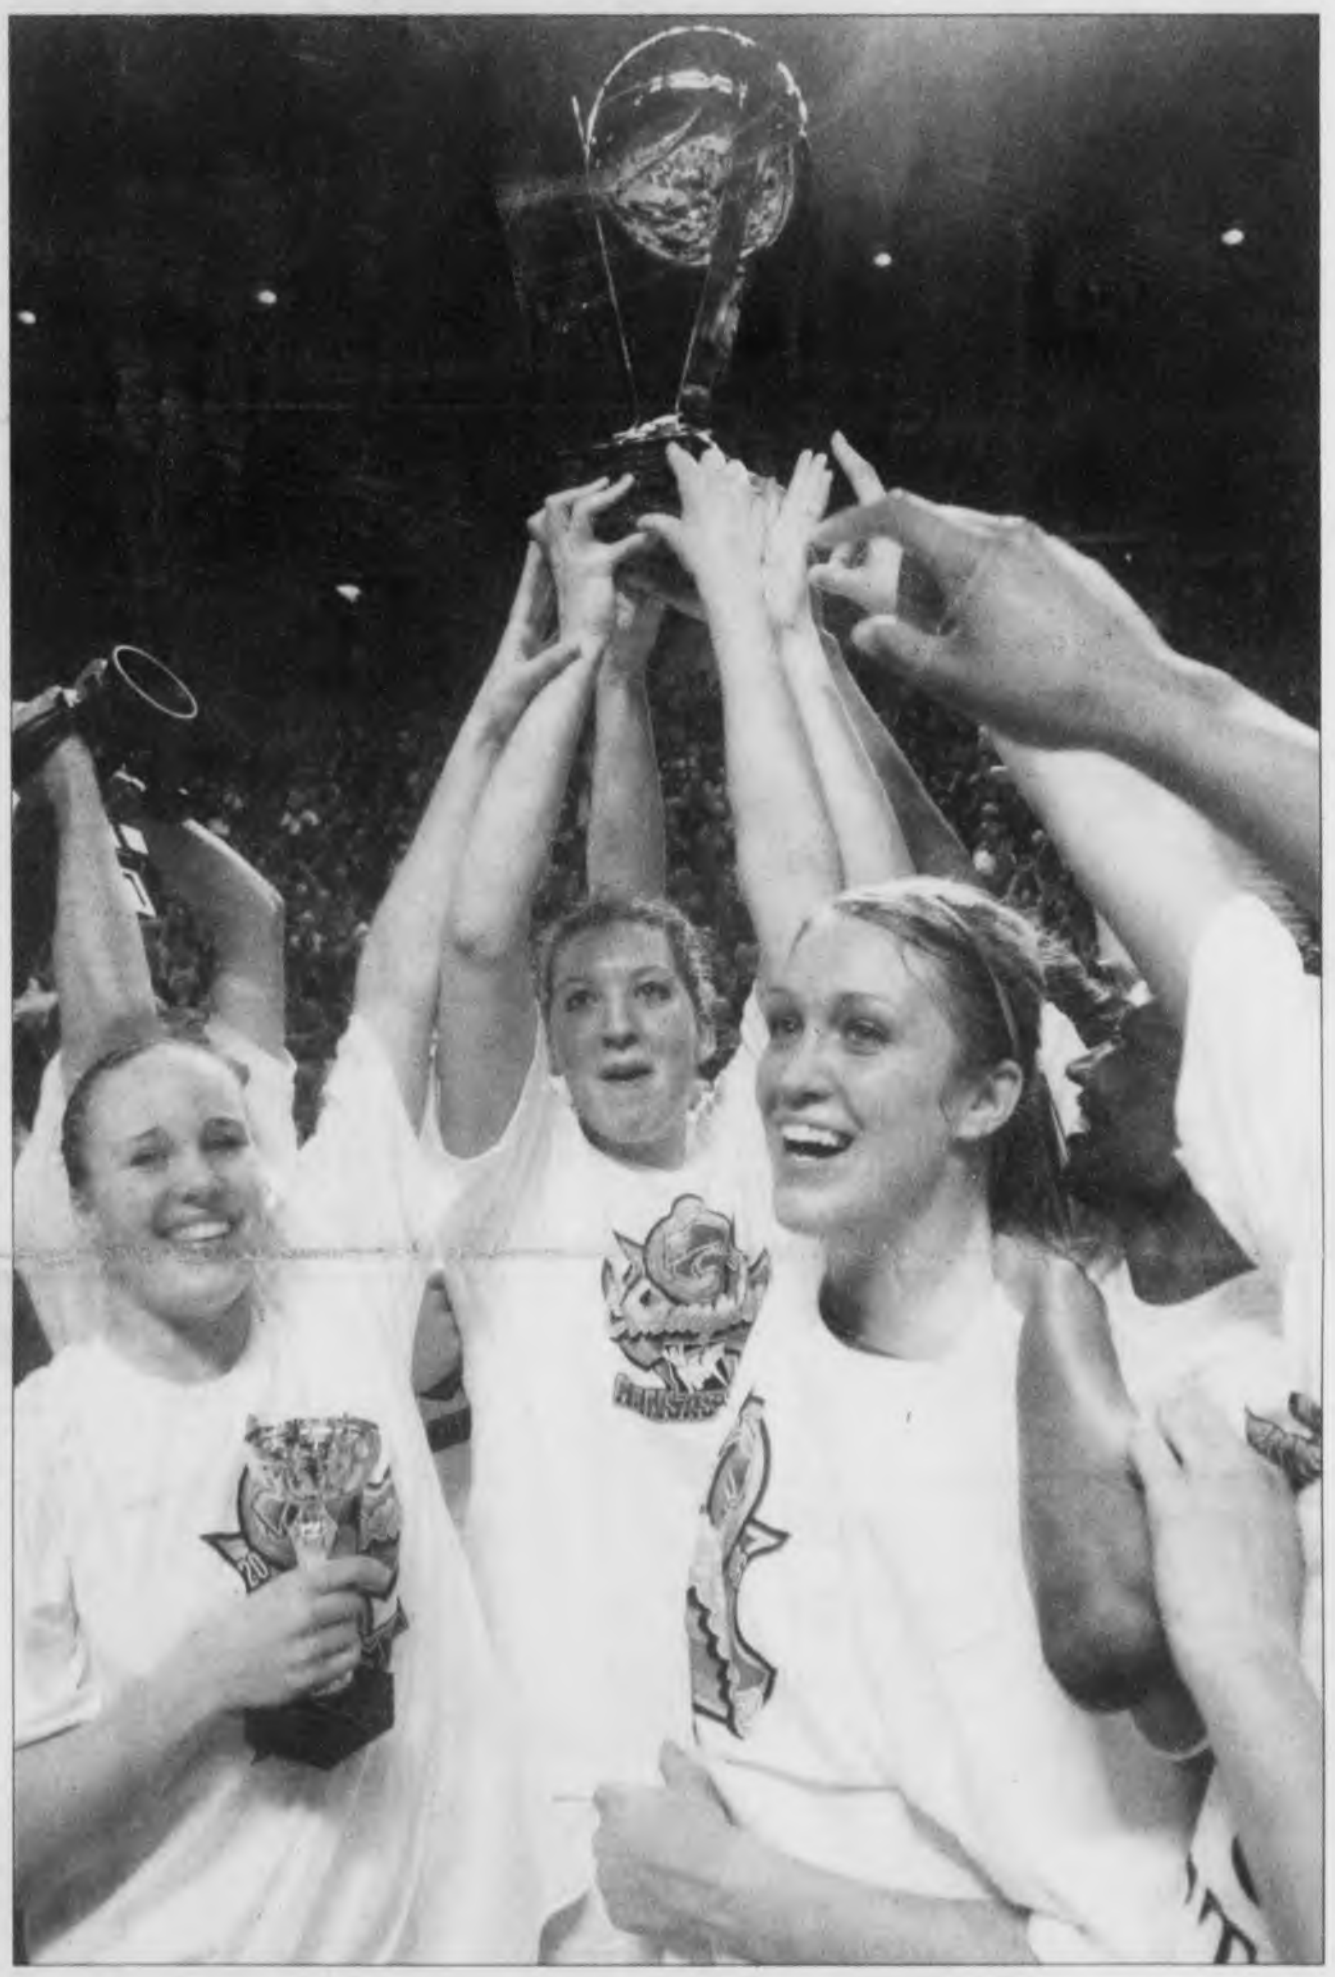
By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Wildcats can add a championship to the ring around the rafters of Bramlage Coliseum and a new piece of hardware to the trophy case after defeating Marquette 77-65 in the Women's National Invitation Tournament championship game on Friday in front of 13,340 fans.

In their second-ever WNIT appearance, the Wildcats (24-10) took advantage of five consecutive home games and the second-largest attendance for a postseason WNIT championship game to win their first national postseason championship in school history.

"I'm so happy for our team, and I'm so proud of our team and our staff," said junior and tournament MVP Claire Coggins. "We worked so hard this year, and I'm just very, very proud of how we fought through a lot of adversity, doubt and youth."

K-State was led by freshman Shalee Lehning and sophomore Kimberly Dietz. Lehning registered just the fourth triple-double in K-State history with 14 points, 10 rebounds and 10 assists. Dietz added 21 points on 7-of-13 shooting and was named to the WNIT All-Tournament team along with Coggins.



Coggins finished with just eight points on

Wildcats build for the future with tournament victory

On Friday night the scene in Bramlage Coliseum was pretty electric.

There was a sellout crowd of 13,340, the K-State women pulled out a gritty 77-65 win against a very good Marquette team, nets were cut down and trophies were held high.

MICHAEL ASHFORD

All this for the Women's National Invitation Tournament?

You bet.

For this K-State women's team, winning the WNIT championship over Marquette was more than a chance to extend its season. It was a foundation upon which the next several Wildcat teams can build, a rock on which K-State can steady itself for years to come.

"We're going out with motivation and tons of confidence," sophomore Kimberly Dietz said after her 21-point performance. "Being such a young team, we have so much to look forward to and we know we can compete with anybody. We've proven that. We're going to be so excited for next year."

It's true. K-State looked to be in for a rough year this season after losing Kendra Wecker, Laurie Koehn and Megan Mahoney to the WNBA.

That trio helped push K-State into the realm of the women's basketball's elite, and many felt the loss of such superstars would, if nothing else, push the

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Immigration vote

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist said Sunday he wants a full Senate vote on an immigration bill this week and believes that urgent action is needed despite sharp divisions over whether proposed legislation would amount to amnesty. "There are 3 million people every year coming across our borders illegally. We don't know who they are; we don't know what their intentions are," Frist said.

Missile testing successful

TEHRAN, Iran — Iran conducted its second major test of a new missile within days on Sunday, firing a high-speed torpedo it said no submarine or warship can escape at a time of increased tensions with the United States over its nuclear program. The tests came during war games that Iran's elite Revolutionary Guards have been playing in the Persian Gulf and the Arabian Sea since Friday.

Professor arrested

A search performed by the Riley County Police Department in March led to the Friday arrest of psychology professor John Uhlarik, 63. Uhlarik was arrested on one count of possession of marijuana and five counts of possession of drug paraphernalia. The March search stemmed from Uhlarik's arrest for stalking and violating a protective order dating back to an incident in 2004. Uhlarik was released Friday on $2,000 bond.

Sell-out

Friday's Women's National Invitation Tournament championship game had a sell-out crowd of 13,340. The attendance was the second-highest mark for a WNIT championship game behind 2001's matchup of Ohio State and New Mexico.

WEEK IN REVIEW

7 things you didn't know 7 days ago

American reporter released by Iraqi captors

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Wearing a green Islamic head scarf, American reporter Jill Carroll walked into an Iraqi political party office Thursday, set free nearly three months after being kidnapped in an ambush.

"I was treated well, but I don't know why I was kidnapped," Carroll said on Baghdad television, only weeks after she appeared weeping in a video put out by kidnappers who had threatened to kill her.

SHIITES MAD OVER U.S. RAID

BAGHDAD, Iraq – Shiite politicians raged at the United States and halted negotiations on a new government Monday after a military assault killed at least 16 people in what Iraqis claim was a mosque.

The firestorm of recrimination over Sunday's raid in northeast Baghdad will likely make it harder for Shiite politicians to keep a lid on their more angry followers as sectarian violence boils over, with at least 142 dead since Sunday.

IMMIGRATION BILL CLIPPED

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Senators broke Monday from the House's get-tough approach by refusing to make criminals of people who help illegal immigrants. The Senate Judiciary Committee adopted an amendment by Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., that would protect church and charitable groups, as well as individuals, from criminal prosecution for providing food, shelter, medical care and counseling to undocumented immigrants.

SAGO MINE SURVIVOR RELEASED

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. – Sago Mine survivor Randal McCloy Jr., looking thin and stiff but walking on his own, offered his gratitude Thursday as he was released from a hospital after almost three months.

"I'd just like to thank everybody for their thoughts and prayers," McCloy said softly, wearing a baseball cap and a racing-team jacket at a morning news conference. He paused, then added with a weak smile, "I believe that's it."

SCHOOL FINANCE DEBATED

TOPEKA – Kansas senators began Thursday to winnow down options for increasing aid to public schools, with conservative Republicans claiming the debate was pushing the state toward big financial problems.

On the Senate's debate calendar were a House-approved plan to phase in a $633 million increase in school funding over three years; Senate leaders' three-year, $660 million plan; and Sen. Jim Barnett's four-year, $495 million plan.

MOUSSAOUI TESTIFIES

ALEXANDRIA, Va. – Zacarias Moussaoui, al-Qaeda conspirator, testified Monday that he and would-be shoe bomber Richard Reid were supposed to hijack a fifth airplane and fly it into the White House as part of the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks.

Moussaoui
AL-QAEDA CONSPIRATOR

This contradicted his previous statements in which he said the White House attack was to happen if the United States refused to release an Egyptian sheik imprisoned on terrorist convictions.

STEROID INVESTIGATION LAUNCHED

NEW YORK – Commissioner Bud Selig announced Thursday that former Senate majority leader George Mitchell will lead an independent investigation into alleged steroid use by Barry Bonds and other players associated with the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative (BALCO).

Selig, however, emphasized that Mitchell has the authority to expand the scope of the probe if necessary.

"Nothing is more important to me than the integrity of the game of baseball," said Selig, pressured to investigate after the publication of "Game of Shadows," a book written by two San Francisco Chronicle reporters detailing alleged steroid use by Bonds and others.

Fraternities, sorority give Easter egg hunt

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Katie Baxt, sophomore in apparel marketing, paints the face of Hanna Zlab, 3, Sunday afternoon at Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. The event was originally planned for Lee Elementary School, but poor weather forced the organizations to move the event to the fraternity house.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hanna Zlab received a face-painting of a dog on Sunday at an egg hunt and carnival.

Zlab, 3, attended the egg hunt and carnival put on by Pi Kappa Alpha, Phi Kappa Theta and Delta Delta Delta. She was accompanied by her mother Denise Zlab, junior in pre-journalism and mass communications.

"We came just to have a nice family Sunday afternoon outing," said Denise Zlab, who heard about the event at the KSU Child Development Center.

Chad Bowman, president of Pike and junior in finance, said this was the second year for the egg hunt and carnival.

"Last year we decided to make it annual since it was successful," Bowman said.

The afternoon featured an egg hunt, a dunk tank, egg and face painting, cookie walk and relay races.

Michael Dedonder, Pike philanthropy chair, said businesses donated items for the event, and it was advertised to all elementary schools.

"There's not much going around that has to do with an egg hunt and carnival," Dedonder, freshman in nutrition sciences, said. "There's a lot going on with college-aged kids, and we're trying to get the whole community involved."

Makenzie Harper, 10, attended the carnival with her 6-year-old brother Jalin and 4-year-old sister Haleigh.

"I came to have fun," said Makenzie, who got a Powercat face-painting from a member of Tri-Delt.

Bowman said there were about 100 children in attendance throughout Sunday afternoon.

While the event was originally planned to take place at Lee School, it was relocated to the Pike house due to inclement weather.

The egg hunt and carnival were successful because they reached out to the community, Bowman said.

"We think it's important for the greek system to combat the bad (public relations) that the greek life has and stigmas that exist about greek life," he said. "We're about giving back to the community as well."

4 soldiers arrested Saturday

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four Fort Riley soldiers were arrested early Saturday morning in connection with aggravated robbery in Manhattan's City Park.

The Riley County Police Department was notified that the victims were approached by several suspects demanding money near the baseball diamonds in the park, according to a RCPD press release.

RCPD was notified that some of the suspects were armed when the demand for money took place.

A description of the suspects and their vehicle was given to the RCPD, and shortly after the report, patrol officers observed a vehicle matching the description leaving the area.

Officers stopped the vehicle and arrested the suspects, recovering money and handguns, according to the release.

All four were arrested in connection with aggravated robbery, and all had bond set at $100,000.

The case is still under investigation.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

International Week educates, entertains

This week, April 3-7, students of different cultural backgrounds and ethnicities will be organizing and promoting International Week.

There will be several events each day during the week for everyone who is interested to enjoy.

The week-long celebration has a long tradition at K-State, and many of the students involved in the planning and the presentation of the week look forward to it with anticipation, and their hard work should be recognized.

Many have said International Week gives them the opportunity to share their culture with the campus and community.

Students, faculty and members of the community should seize this opportunity to educate themselves on the colorful tapestry that composes the university we attend, the students who make it that way and the world in which we live.

The good fortune of having such an event at our fingertips, with the chance to educate ourselves on the lives of those around us, should be enjoyed by all, and the lessons learned about the world and the people who inhabit it should be internalized and remembered in these divisive times.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Symbol of freedom

U.S. flag deserves respect, should not be burned

Illustrations by Ashley Burke | COLLEGIAN

DANIEL KIRKSEY

I must start with this preface in order to avoid offending anyone.

First, I want everyone to put their "race cards" away. I was born Daniél José Alcalá to a Mexican father only to later be adopted by a wonderful father with a different last name.

Making baseless claims toward my own heritage out of ignorance or hate is not my intention.

The people I spent time defending in my column last Monday have spent the week in mass protest waving the Mexican flag while burning the American one.

My first response to this is natural and probably not uncommon: this is not Mexico.

Our liberal left refuses to let us adopt English as a national language, so it is not a surprise to see parts of this country resemble Mexico.

For instance, it can be difficult to find a native English-speaking person or even an English road sign in parts of southern California, but the fact remains – this is not Mexico.

There is a long history of mistreatment of Mexican-Americans (legal and illegal) in this country, but there is an acceptable and unacceptable way of going about protest.

Cesar Chavez, a Mexican-American activist most prevalent in the 1950s, '60s and '70s, brought about great changes in this country for the good of Mexican-Americans.

Inspired by the teachings of Jesus and Gandhi, he did not declare war on the United States. He sought peaceful solutions knowing that the U.S., as was intended, was not the enemy.

He understood that the United States is free speech and the right to bear arms; it is freedom to practice one's own religion without fear of state interference.

As Americans, "we hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness..."

Chavez understood that though the U.S. is not paradise, its ideals are based in the natural God-given rights of humankind and are flawless.

These are the perfect ideals the flag represents.

I have literally seen the blood and death of Americans in the defense of those ideals, and very little disgusts me more than the disgrace of that flag.

Know what the U.S. flag represents.

It is the United States that those protesters in California last week or any flag-burning protesters violently threaten – not peacefully protest.

As Americans we do not have to stand for this.

Though we live in a gray society that refuses to label anything right or wrong, this should not be tolerated.

The American flag is not

"Amnesty for Illegal Aliens," "Harsher Penalties for Illegal Aliens," "George Bush," "The War in Iraq" or any other government policy or facet.

The American flag is deeper than that.

All of those policies and facets are an attempt to interpret the flag, and ignorance of that fact is unforgivable.

Burning the American flag is unforgivable.

'Brokeback Mountain' offers fresh look at love

MEGAN GREEN

As college students we are advised to experience new things. These include meeting people you usually would not talk to due to their different backgrounds and maintaining an open mind.

Yet some students would rather not speak to one person because they are different in another way or they are homosexual.

"Brokeback Mountain," the movie about two homosexual cowboys who fall in love, is coming out on DVD and video on Tuesday. The movie was nominated for best picture at the Oscars, but it didn't win.

Many people were upset that the movie did not receive the award, so they began to form groups and buy advertisements in magazines.

These groups said the movie was not given the award because the film featured homosexuals, which people did not want to see. The ads' messages maintained that "Brokeback Mountain" was the best movie and a new beginning for homosexuals and the film industry.

I agree that this is a new era for all homosexuals: filmmakers now will add more homosexual elements to films, and many people did not watch the movie because of the homosexuality. But here is where I think college students differ from the average Joe.

Since we all are at a time when we are eager to learn and experience more, I think many more college students saw this movie because it was about homosexuals – I know I did.

I wanted to take a peek into the life of a homosexual, see what it was about and see if it was different from my own life.

I cried through some of the movie and was deeply moved at other times.

It was different from my life, but only because a man loved a man instead of a woman and had to keep the relationship a secret.

To be honest, I loved the movie.

It because it showed a different side of love, yet that love is exactly the same as the love I feel for another person. I loved it because we could see a homosexual's life in a serious and thought-provoking way. Now I have a little understanding of what it means to be homosexual.

I'm telling you this because I think every person should see it. I know not everyone will like it or agree with it, but it's good to be able to take a side.

People are people.

Whether they are gay, straight, Hispanic, Asian or white, disliking a person because of that without knowing anything about them is wrong.

We are here to learn and experience, so why not learn about something we will face every day – a person different from us.?

I think that for every person who sees "Brokeback Mountain," many more will learn and understand and we will have a little less hate in our world and a lot more understanding.

Two-day softball tournament raises almost $5K for charity

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Amid the fields filled with children playing soccer at Frank Anneberg Park, 3801 Anderson Ave., groups from 15 K-State fraternities and 19 independent teams played in a softball tournament to benefit the Ronald McDonald House.

This was the first year in almost 20 that the tournament has had so many teams that it took two days to play all the games, Lauren Luhrs, senior in human ecology and mass communications, said.

Lambda Chi Alpha won the fraternity trophy in the tournament, Luhrs said.

"They made it the farthest in the tournament, so we named them our champions," she said.

Thirty-four teams participated in the tournament, which raised $4,700 in entry fees and donations from local businesses.

The money will be donated to the Ronald McDonald House at 825 Buchanan St. in Topeka and the newly built Ronald McDonald House at 2502 Cherry St., Kansas City, Mo.

Fees for the tournament were $110 for fraternities, and $130 for independent teams.

Prizes for the winning team included a trophy and gift certificates for local businesses, Luhrs said.

Teams playing in the tournament play at other tournaments, said Ross Talley, former K-State student now living in Lawrence and attending the University of Kansas.

"We play for the sorority every year," Talley said.

This tournament is different from others Talley's team, The Shingles, play in, he said.

The games start with a one-one count and have a three home run limit per team per inning, he said.

One reason for entering the tournament was the benefits to the team, said Darrin Sterrett, Salina resident and member of Team Freakzilla.

"It's early in the year, and there are a lot of teams, so we get a lot of swings in," Sterrett said. "It's for a good cause."

After year-end inspection, deposit can be returned

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The end of the semester, graduation and move-out time are approaching. Before moving out, students should consider the condition of their home.

Tips and information are available to educate student tenants on their rights related to their housing contracts, landlords and security deposits.

A security deposit is an amount of money given by the tenant to the landlord which he keeps as collateral. It is returned when the contract is up, if the terms and conditions of the contract are met by the resident and the house or apartment is in good condition.

Steve Hanson has rented houses for 13 years and owns eight houses in Manhattan. He said there are various ways tenants can lose their security deposits.

"Any repairs needed due to tenants will require the removal of security deposits," Hanson said. "If a tenant puts something down the plumbing that shouldn't be, and a plumber needs to be called, or something along those lines, then they could be charged using their security deposit."

Hanson said the two main reasons a security deposit would not be returned are consistent late payment of rent and damage to the house.

He said residents need to remember they cannot use their security deposit for payment of the last month of rent. Students also should realize that damage caused by one person is the responsibility of all tenants in the house and that pets also cause damage.

"That's why it's important if you're teaming when buying a house – if someone brings a pet, you're all responsible," Hanson said.

For more information
Go to www.hcci-ks.org.

The security deposit can also be used for cleaning costs.

"A lot of people leave right after school, and the house needs cleaned," Hanson said. "It needs to be clean before they leave. If it's not, I take the amount it costs to get it cleaned divided by the amount of tenants."

Housing and Credit Counseling Incorporated is a nonprofit organization based out of Topeka that offers advice on residents' rights and information on rental law and the Landlord Tenant Act. The organization also has offices in Lawrence, Emporia, Kan., and Manhattan, 513 Leavenworth, Suite C.

Baker said students who are from another city or state should be especially careful.

"Always leave a reliable forwarding address you can keep track of, otherwise the landlord can mail it back to the house they moved out of," Baker said.

The security deposit should be mailed to the resident 30 days after move-out. Baker said residents can request the return of their security deposit for up to five years if he or she has all agreements in writing.

"If no notification was given to you and you're sure your place was in great shape, you can go to small claims court and file a small claims action and you can ask for a return of the deposit in full," Baker said. "If you have the proper documentation, you'll get it back."

Baker said students should make sure they receive and keep receipts for everything they pay for. This includes checks, statements or money orders. Taking pictures and an inventory of the premises while writing the details is helpful, he said.

A one-hour presentation is available by ordering on the HCCI Web site. It will send someone to make a presentation about applying, inspecting a place, contracts, signing a lease and more.

Morgan Clark, junior in elementary education, rented a house with two roommates last year. She said she wished she was more careful when she signed a contract and more educated in lease signing and the use of security deposits.

"We had to pay for dents in the wall and replacement of all of the screens in our screened-in porch, even though we only broke one of them," she said. "They also charged us for light bulbs, cleaning for the oven and fridge, batteries for the smoke alarms had to be replaced, and they took money out for professional cleaning."

The charges added up to $15,000. What was not covered by their security deposits came out of their pockets. She said she and her roommates were overcharged for many things and there was miscommunication between the tenants and the landlord.

"They deducted money from our deposits for painting our rooms without permission, even though we got it from the property manager."

Nebraska takes series after falling Friday

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

K-State coach Brad Hill argues with an umpire about a call during Saturday afternoon's game against Nebraska. After an 11-5 win over the Cornhuskers Friday night, K-State lost the two weekend games to drop their Big 12 record to 2-4.

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A thunderstorm dumped heavy rain on Manhattan Saturday night, but it was an offensive drought that doomed K-State against No. 3 Nebraska on Sunday.

The Cornhuskers kept K-State (20-5, 2-4 Big 12 Conference) scoreless for the first six innings against Nebraska (20-5, 4-2 Big 12) as the Wildcats dropped the series finale 12-2 at Tointon Family Stadium.

Sunday's loss cost K-State the chance for a series win. The Wildcats blasted Nebraska 11-5 Friday night and lost 5-4 Saturday afternoon.

Nebraska took control of Sunday's rubber match with a four-run third inning, highlighted by Andrew Brown's three-run double.

K-State starter sophomore Chase Bayuk said the Wildcats fell behind early and never recovered.

"I thought when we got down early, the umpires kind of got in our heads," Bayuk said. "We needed a couple plays to give us more confidence. We had some good swings. Things just didn't go our way today."

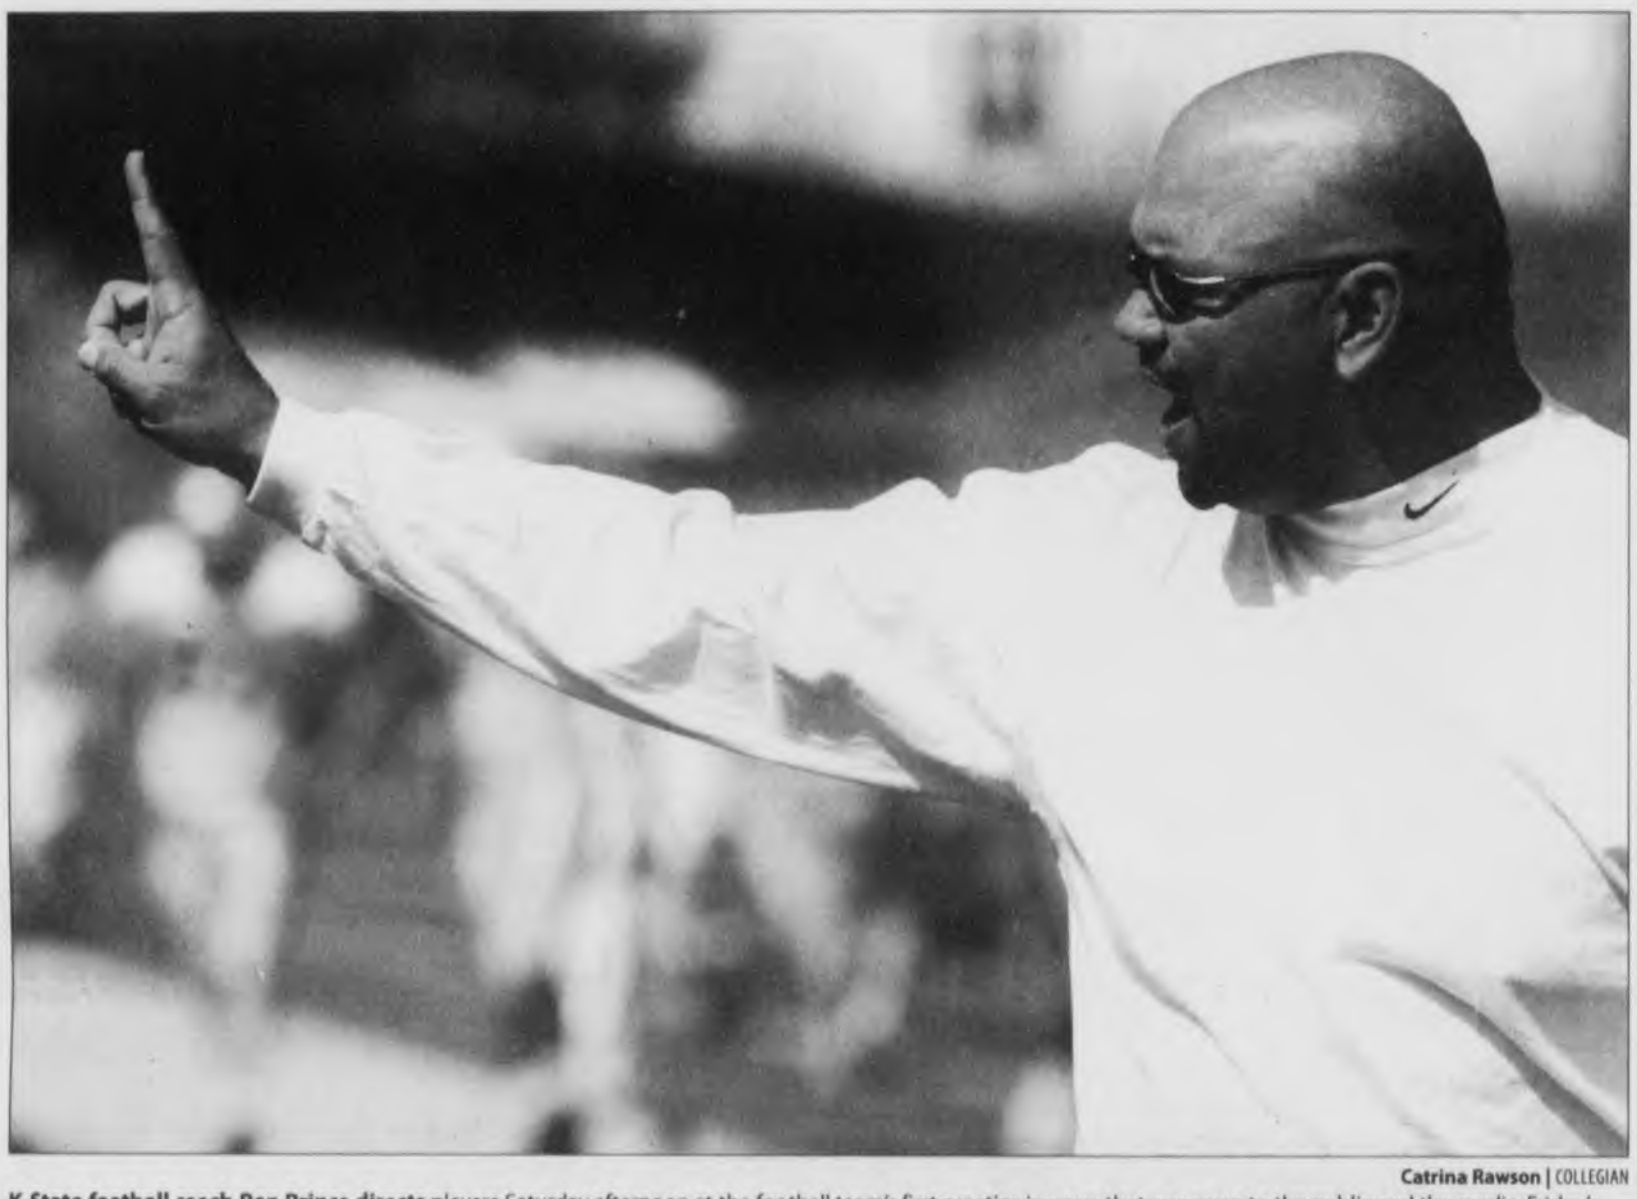
"Johnny Dorn is awful good," K-State coach Brad Hill said. "He's won a lot of games in two years for them.

"You give him a five-run lead, and he's going to come right at you."



K-State did not score until freshman Rob Vaughn punched an RBI single in the seventh inning. Senior Joe Roundy added a solo home run in the eighth.

Roundy said despite the lopsided score, K-State never stopped fighting.

"We knew today we were in the ballgame the whole time. We just weren't able to make adjustments," Roundy said. "That's what coach (Brad) Hill talked to us about after the game – making adjustments to what the pitcher is doing."

A Tointon Stadium-record 3,139 fans witnessed K-State's 5-4 loss on Saturday. Nebraska scored a single run in five of the first six innings against K-State starter senior Adam Cowart out took a 5-2 lead into the eighth inning.

Spring fling

1st open practices provide excitement, raise questions

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The first week of spring practice is over, and the players already see a distinct difference in the practice styles of coach Ron Prince and former coach Bill Snyder.

"It's a lot different than last year; it's more fast-paced," senior linebacker Maurice Mack said. "They threw a lot at us, and I think everybody is handling it pretty well."

Cones were set up to make a mini 10-yard field that was about five yards wide, and five offensive players – a quarterback, running back and three linemen – went up against three defensive players in a game to three points. The object was to see if the defense could stop the offense from moving the ball 10 yards in a four-play series.

The first series saw freshman quarterback Josh Freeman and sophomore running back Parrish Fisher score on a little trickery. Freeman faked a handoff to Fisher and scampered around the end to score on the second play of the series, putting the offense up 1-0.

The second series took three plays, but sophomore quarterback Allan Evridge handed the ball to freshman running back Courtney Greer for a three-yard touchdown run to give the offense a 2-0 lead.

The only score for the defense came on the third play of the third series when sixth-year senior running back Carlos Alsup fumbled the ball into the hands of the defense.

The offense put the drill away when Fisher scored on the third play of the fourth series after taking a handoff from freshman quarterback Kevin Lopina.

Offensive and defensive coordinators James Franklin and Raheem Morris were in each other's faces during the entire drill, both arguing about which side would win the drill. Junior defensive back Bryan Baldwin said the coaches getting into the drill, coupled with the fans in

Lehning notches triple-double in WNIT championship

By Matt Gorney
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Freshman Shalee Lehning is as close to a force of nature as a basketball player can get. In her first season as a K-State Wildcat, her tenacity couldn't be stopped.

When she wanted a rebound, she got it. When she needed to increase her free-throw percentage, she did. When she needed to step up and be more of a scoring threat, she put the ball through the net.

During K-State's 77-65 win against Marquette on Friday, Lehning helped her team to its first national postseason championship by recording her first career triple-double.

After hoisting the Women's National Invitation Tournament championship trophy and cutting down the nets in celebration, Lehning said she didn't even know what she had done.

"I had no idea," she said. "I was just out there trying to contribute and help my team. I didn't really know what the stats were."

When it comes to playing basketball, there is only one thing Lehning does not do – she never hordes the credit for her exploits.

Against Marquette, Lehning scored 14 points, totaled 10 assists and grabbed 10 rebounds. When asked about her feelings on her first triple-double, she immediately discussed her teammates.

"It's awesome, but I have to give the credit to my teammates," Lehning said. "They were out there battling with me, and they're the ones that were making the shots, and they're the ones that were out there with me getting the rebounds and whatever else."

Junior Claire Coggins was voted the MVP of the WNIT and was awarded her own trophy. She said many of her teammates deserved a portion of that MVP honor and singled out Lehning's performance in particular.

"Shalee, I mean good Lord, a triple-double," Coggins said. "I don't think I've ever dreamed of having a triple-double or a double-double. Seriously, that is just unbelievable. That's unbelievable."

In K-State women's basketball history, only two other players have recorded a triple-double. During her four-year career as a Wildcat in 1983-87, Carlisa Thomas set the current record for triple-doubles with two. In more recent memory, Megan Mahoney became the second Wildcat player with a triple-double in 2003.

TEN | Federer edges Ljubicic in Biscayne final

Federer

Federer came from behind in every tiebreaker to claim the Key Biscayne title for the second year in a row Sunday, beating Ivan Ljubicic 7-6 (5), 7-6 (4), 7-6 (6).

The top-ranked Federer won three tiebreakers in a match for the first time to remain unbeaten since August 2004 in the United States, where he has won 48 consecutive matches and the past seven tournaments he has entered.

HOR | Barbaro moves up list of Derby contenders

Trainer Michael Matz is making all the right moves with unbeaten Barbaro, yet Kentucky Derby history might be working against him.

Then again, it's tough to argue with perfection.

Barbaro ran his record to 5-for-5 with a half-length victory over Sharp Humor in Saturday's $1 million Florida Derby at Gulfstream Park.

The 3-year-old colt not only showed he could handle a fast dirt track, but he also overcame an unfavorable outside post position to defeat 10 rivals.

Florida Marlins owner Jeffrey Loria said Sunday that discussions with San Antonio officials about the possibility of relocating the team there are serious.

San Antonio has been trying to lure the team, and officials have offered to put $200 million toward an estimated $300 million ballpark if voters approve extending a tax.

Campus Escape to fund Manhattan Habitat house

By Lacey Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The clock is ticking, and a team of two runs to 15 locations to find clues and accomplish physical and mental challenges.

It sounds like a reality TV show, but it is all on K-State's campus.

K-State's Habitat for Humanity will have a fundraiser, Campus Escape, in which participants race around the K-State campus collecting clues and completing challenges.

Campus Escape, in conjunction with Blue Hills Adventures LLC, a sports promotion and management company, will take place Saturday and will cost $25 for each participant.

Teams will consist of two members, one of whom must be a K-State student, staff or faculty member or alumnus.

All entries must be in by Wednesday.

Proceeds from the event will go to K-State and Manhattan's Habitat for Humanity groups to build a five-bedroom house in Manhattan.

Cooper said the house will be for a family of seven and will be one of the biggest houses Habitat for Humanity has constructed in Manhattan.

For more information
Visit www.campusescape.com to find out how to sign up or become a volunteer.

"Everything's going to a great cause," Cooper said. "There will be tons of prizes, food, and it will be really interactive."

As a first-time event, Cooper said the group hopes the fundraiser will be successful enough to take to other schools in the Big 12 conference in the future, possibly making a competition among schools if the event is successful.

Clay Myers-Bowman, owner and manager of Blue Hills Adventures said after beginning Blue Hills Adventures, the organization was looking for different events to do in the community.

Myers-Bowman said he was a part of Habitat for Humanity in the past and wanted to see what could be done to support the group.

"It's an organization that impacts lives in a very real way," he said. "It's an organization for me that gets to the root causes and not just the surface."

Myers-Bowman said he started to talk about helping Habitat for Humanity and approached the group about Campus Escape.

"We wanted to create something that never really had been done before," he said. "It's not your normal fundraiser."

The group planned the event during K-State's Open House to ensure teams competing would be able to see the campus busy with activity, Myers-Bowman said.

"It makes it a lot more fun because there are a lot more people," he said.

While the $25 might seem a little expensive, Myers-Bowman said participants should remember the event is a fundraiser for Habitat for Humanity, and the money goes to a good cause.

"It's well worth that money," he said.

Cassie Knudsen, freshman in feed science management, said K-State's Habitat for Humanity has generated interest for the event with posters, radio broadcasts and chalking on campus.

Knudsen said the group's goal is to have at least 50 teams involved in the event.

Knudsen also said she is excited about Campus Escape because she thinks it is an alternative to other fundraisers.

"It's different," Knudsen said. "It's not the same old selling-cookies fundraiser. It gets the whole school involved."

Teachers honored for MAC work

In 1994, Susanna Parker and Roger Gibson attended a training seminar in Cleveland, Ohio, to learn about an educational program involving the unusual combination of elementary school students and opera.

The focus of the program was for the students to work as a group to write, compose and perform an original opera.

Parker and Gibson, both teachers at Roosevelt School, brought opera back to Manhattan and have used the program with their students for the past 12 years.

Gibson and Parker were honored for their artistic contribution to the Manhattan community during the presentation of the annual Arts Heart Awards Saturday night at the Manhattan Arts Center, 1520 Poyntz Ave.

Parker was unable to attend the event, but a few of her and Gibson's former students were present to talk about the effect the opera experience had on them.

"It showed me what I was capable of," Matthew Hoag, senior in computer science, said.

Hoag also talked about how he appreciated the work the two teachers did for the students, making the opera a reality for them.

When he accepted his award, Gibson talked about when he and Parker went to Cleveland for the training for the original opera and how he wasn't enthusiastic about it.

"Now, 11 years and nine operas later, it's incredible to think what we've accomplished," Gibson said.

Gibson said there were times when he wondered if it would be possible for a group of students so young to complete such a task, but his students proved to him that anything is possible.

"It's really special to be honored by the center this year," he said. "I appreciate all that they do to keep the arts central to the community."

After the presentation of the awards, a group of musicians led by pianist Charles Faulk accompanied singers Allison Karnowski, Lauren Rohrer, Frank Schmeidler and Austin Short as they performed several love songs, many of which were selections from musicals.

"For tonight, we have chosen songs that showcase the foolishness and foolhardiness of love," Faulk said.

To begin and close the show, the singers performed ensemble pieces, and Karnowski, K-State graduate; Rohrer, junior in applied music; Short, junior in applied music; and Schmeidler, director of worship at St. Isidore's Catholic Student Center, each performed three solo pieces.

To end the evening, guests were invited to the main gallery, where celebrity chefs, including city commissioner Jayme Morris-Hardeman and Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, had prepared several chocolate desserts for patrons to enjoy.

Gibson said he enjoyed the evening, but he wished Parker could have been there to take part.

"She was really the driving force behind everything," he said.

Short said he was happy with the performance, and had a lot of fun.

"We had a really tight group, and the (musicians) were excellent," Short said.

Short said another part of the evening he enjoyed was chocolate.

"I think I'm going to have to get a cavity filled tomorrow," he said.

Theater upgrades increase attendance, satisfaction

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

It has been one year since Seth Child Cinema was renovated.

Seth Child Cinema closed in January 2005 to renovate the entrance and six of the auditoriums.

A year later, the theater has seen benefits from its renovation.

There has been an increase in revenue as well as overall customer satisfaction, said Judy Russell, director of investor and public relations for Carmike Cinemas.

"We can see that our customers are satisfied when we look at the increase of attendance in the theater," Russell said.

All of the theaters now have stadium seating with high-chair backs and retractable armrests outfitted with drink holders, according to a press release from Russell.

Seth Child Cinema is a theater part of the Carmike Cinemas chain.

The cinema's theaters are focused in areas with small to mid-sized communities, with populations less than 100,000 people, Russell said.

"We target those areas because we're located in Columbus, Ga., and therefore we know the smaller markets," Russell said.

Jessica Hamilton, senior in life science, said she likes the renovations of the auditoriums because they're a lot more comfortable and they don't feel as cramped as the seating before.

"They've really updated the theaters," Hamilton said. "Before it was old and a little dirty."

Constance Thooft, sophomore in math, said she loves stadium seating since she can see better.

However, Thooft said one aspect of the theater that seems to stay the same are the high ticket prices.

"Tickets are so expensive," she said. "That's why I only go to the matinees."

Tickets at Carmike are $7.50 for adults and $5.50 for children. The matinee price for adults is $5.50.

Mervin Lare, junior in civil engineering, said he is pleased with the overall renovations, especially the entrance.

"It's really easy to find where the tickets are, and it gives it a really good flair," Lare said.

Ramada renovations delayed by 3-4 months

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Ramada Plaza Hotel is still a work in progress.

The hotel at the corner of 17th Street and Anderson Avenue has been under renovation since late 2005 to become a Holiday Inn Select. The construction was supposed to be completed by March 17.

"We are progressing but we've fallen behind the schedule by three to four months for various reasons," hotel owner Colin Noble said.

Noble also runs Noble Hospitality, a hotel management company with 25 hotels throughout the Midwest.

Noble said problems encountered during construction caused the delay, and he now expects the work to be complete in June.

He wouldn't elaborate on what kinds of problems or who was responsible.

Francis Construction of Rossville, Kan., is doing the construction. Owner Kent Francis declined to say why construction was delayed.

The construction crews have already removed all the concrete fins on the sides of the building.

Noble said Holiday Inn required the change to make the building appear more modern.

He said all of the hotel's windows will be replaced and each room will have a special trickle vent installed to allow fresh air into the rooms.

Noble said two-fifths of them have already been replaced.

General manager John Rychlock said the vents are required on all hotels in Great Britain, where they were manufactured.

He said Noble got the idea from seeing the same vents in hotels in Las Vegas, where they are common.

The hotel will not be a Holiday Inn Select. Rychlock said he learned recently that InterContinental Hotels Group, Holiday Inn's parent company, was canceling the Holiday Inn Select brand.

The Ramada Plaza Hotel is having higher-end amenities installed in its rooms for the change, such as tile in its showers and stone bathroom counters.

The upgrades are still going in, but Rychlock said the hotel will be a regular Holiday Inn instead.

"I don't know that it was a big surprise, because they had a lot of trouble marketing Holiday Inn Select," he said.

Rychlock said people were confused by having three kinds of Holiday Inns, which are the upscale Select, regular Holiday Inn and the budget Holiday Inn Express.

He said the company will try to bring up the quality of all its hotels.

InterContinental Hotels Group could not be reached for comment.

Noble said the delay is not good for his bottom line, because many of the hotel's rooms will be unusable during May, its second-busiest month of the year.

He said October is its best month.

"We don't want to be doing any of these renovations in the good season," Noble said.

The Holiday Inn & Holidome, 530 Richards Drive, is going to be changing as well.

Glen Waack, guest services manager, said it would be a Clarion Hotel starting May 1, and begin a year of renovations. After that, it will become a Sheraton Hotel, he said.

Mayor reflects on work as term closes

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ed Klimek's one-year term as Manhattan mayor will end on April 8, and Mayor Pro-Tem Bruce Snead will assume the office.

"I think it's been one of the most exciting years in the history of Manhattan with what's going on and the opportunity to grow and to be successful at that growth," Klimek said of his term. "Healthy growth is real important, and I think we've been very good at that."

Klimek, elected mayor for a second term after serving three years ago, said the expansion of Fort Riley and Manhattan's downtown redevelopment project were key issues he saw as mayor.

With Fort Riley rapidly growing and limited on-post housing, about 10,000 soldiers will be looking for a place to live, Klimek said.

As a result of this population increase, the city has recognized a need for between 1,000 and 2,000 additional living units.

This has provided a challenge, Klimek said, because not only do the units have to be built, but also street space and sewer and water systems will have to be provided as well.

"We're just working with the military to accommodate their needs," Klimek said. "Working with the federal government and military has been a very dynamic part of this year's term."

City mayors are appointed for a one-year term and are elected during the city commission election, which happens every two years.

There are a total of five commission seats, and three of the seats are up for reelection at one time. The two candidates who receive the largest number of votes will serve a term as mayor, Bruce Snead, Mayor Pro- Tem, said.

However, the mayoral elections run about two years behind, so when a new mayor is elected, he or she will have to wait two or three years to take office, Snead said.

The mayor and the mayor Pro-Tem also serve on the City Commission after being elected. However, while the mayor leads city commission meetings and prepares the agenda, he only is allowed one vote, just like the other four commissioners.

Though Klimek's second term as mayor is ending, he will continue to serve on the City Commission, as the election will take place in 2007.

The downtown redevelopment project also has been a huge topic in the last year, Klimek said. The master plan of the project is to make Manhattan a regional shopping district.

The plan includes the construction of a Best Buy store and the possibility of an indoor recreation facility and aquatic center.

The City Commission also has compiled a quality of life list, which includes enhancements in other recreational areas, like renovating three swimming pools and a zoo education facility, Klimek said.

"This has been a huge project for us, and a good project, and we hope we can get it done," Klimek said.

Gary Fees, city clerk, said these two issues have been crucial to Manhattan in the last year.

"They're still very ongoing and have taken a lot of time with the commission and staff," Fees said.

BASEBALL | Rice leads Cats with 4 RBIs in Friday's 11-5 win

Sophomore Cris Tapia's two-run home run pulled K-State to within one run, but Nebraska's Brett Jensen pitched a 1-2-3 ninth for the save.

Hill said a lack of patience at the plate contributed to the Wildcats' offensive struggles.

On Friday night, the Wildcats posted 11 runs on 13 hits, while Nebraska pitchers doled out 10 walks. Senior Barrett Rice went 2-for-3 and drove in four runs, and junior Jared Goedert added a home run and three RBIs.

A bizarre side note to the series was the ejection of three assistant coaches – Nebraska's Andy Sawyers on Friday and K-State's Tom Myers and Sean McCann on Saturday and Sunday, respectively.

Sawyers and McCann were ejected for arguing balls and strikes, while Myers was tossed after K-State freshman Tyler Link appeared to foul a ball off his leg in the fifth inning. The umpires ruled the ball fair, and Nebraska turned an inning-ending double play.

Hill acknowledged the questionable officiating but said the team needs to learn to play through adversity.

"Whether it's a bad play (or) a pitch you felt like should have been called but wasn't, we haven't dealt with that adversity very well," Hill said.

Despite Sunday's loss, Hill said he feels his team is improving.

"I thought this week we played well in two out of three games," Hill said. "We're making progress."

WNIT | Freshman point guard scores 14 points, grabs 10 rebounds and dishes out 10 assists for Wildcats

Lehning is the first K-State player ever to have a triple-double in her freshman season. She also managed to break two K-State assist records during that freshman season.

"I just thought Shalee's floor game was tremendous across the board," coach Deb Patterson said. "I think it's just become something that's very, very consistent. I think that's what's exceptional about her game right now, just the consistency with which she competes night in and night out. Tonight's scoring was a boost for us on a night when we needed it."

Patterson said Lehning will prove just how good of a basketball player she is.

"When it's over, she will have put numbers on the board that will validate her greatness," Patterson said. "I think that's unusual to be able to say about a freshman point guard competing in the level of competition that we do."

Lehning's triple-double wasn't the only amazing feat at Bramlage Coliseum on Friday night. K-State easily filled every seat in Bramlage to set the second-largest attendance record at a WNIT Championship game with 13,340 people.

"We were very excited this whole tournament with our crowd, because our crowd has been awesome this whole time," Coggins said. "When we all found out that it was sold-out, we were like, 'Man, that is so tight,' and we were just so excited. I have never been somewhere where the fans are that awesome."

The thousands of people who filled Bramlage on Friday night accounted for 40 percent of the total crowd at all of the other WNIT games played in the past few weeks combined.

"I think coming in, we had a lot of fans that followed Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn," junior Twiggy McIntyre said. "They brought a lot of people from their small towns. When those players left, I think we lost a little bit of that fan base.

"Obviously ... we've gained our own new crowd, and we gained a lot of new fans that are excited to see this team in particular."

As for gaining fans, Coggins said one particular group of people have found a second home in Bramlage.

"We've gained the whole population of Sublette, that's for sure," Coggins said.

Lehning is from Sublette, Kan., a town of about 1,600 people, deep in the southwest corner of the state, almost a six-hour drive from Manhattan.

"Our community's a small town," Lehning said. "It's like we're one big family. They've supported me ever since day one. Day in and day out, win or lose, they're out there supporting me, and I just appreciate them so much, and I just love looking up and seeing familiar faces. It's a blessing."

Both men's and women's NCAA national championships and the men's NIT championship are televised nationally, making the WNIT championship the only game of four not televised across the country. However, the game was picked up by two television stations.

Patterson said when she was atop the ladder cutting down the nets, her thoughts were of the people with whom she works with and the fans watching the post-game festivities.

"I thought about the fans and how incredible it was for us to have competed in that environment," Patterson said. "I thought about our players and just how proud I was of how tough-minded they had become as competitors and how happy I was for them. I thought about our staff and how hard they've worked."

At the beginning of the season, K-State was picked to finish eighth in the Big 12 Conference and at the end of the season, the Wildcats weren't selected to play in the Women's NCAA Tournament. When the dust finally settled, K-State was the last Big 12 team playing and the only one contending for a championship.

"We're one of two teams in the country that get to end our season with a win," Coggins said. "And there's no better place to do it than in Bramlage in front of a sold-out crowd."

the stands, added to the excitement.

"There was a lot more cheering going on with the fans here," Baldwin said. "It's more fun and exciting because people definitely have to step up their game a little bit, because they don't want to look too bad in front of everybody."

The mini field was set up on the west side of Snyder Family Stadium, the same side on which the fans sat, to give them a better view of the action.

Noticeably absent from the open practice was senior quarterback Allen Webb. Prince did not comment about Webb's absence after practice.

However, Prince did say he is happy with where the team stands, and he was pleased with the response from the crowd.

"I liked having the fans here because it gets them excited, and it gives us coaches a chance to evaluate our team to see if our guys can perform in front of a crowd, no matter what the size," Prince said. "I was most pleased with the attention to detail. These kids have been really focused on the things we are talking about, and they are very coachable.

"We still have so many things to work on, though. There isn't a facet out here that is ready for a game, because everybody is still rusty."

Fans were able to watch a practice for the first time since Snyder became head coach, and for some, it was an incredible experience.

"It's fun to be able to watch the team practice," said Tim Beymer, 1992 K-State graduate and former sports columnist for the Collegian. "When I was at K-State, Snyder had just taken over as coach and pretty much closed the practices, and it's cool to be able to come out and watch the team play and start putting names with faces.

"You feel more connected as a fan, and you get a chance to see coaches that you know have been hired but don't really know who they are yet."

CHAMPIONSHIP | Dietz scores 21 points in win

3-of-11 shooting, but she averaged 17.4 points per game in the tournament to be named MVP.

"I'm very proud to be a part of this team, and whatever I can contribute is something that I want to do to help us get a victory," Coggins said. "I wasn't great tonight (Friday), but our team was."

Lehning said a championship was the Wildcats' goal from the beginning.

"Ultimately, it's something that we've worked for all season," Lehning said. "Everybody kind of underestimated us at the beginning of the season. We proved to ourselves and everybody else that we are a team that is going to compete, and we're going to do good things."

Coach Deb Patterson said she and the Wildcats were thrilled to be crowned tournament champions and credited the team's success to K-State fans.

"We owe a great deal to our fans for their support through the course of this tournament," Patterson said. "It was an absolutely incredible environment, not just for the Kansas State Wildcats, but for the organizers of the WNIT and for women's basketball."

K-State 77 Marquette 65

	K-State	Marquette
Field goals:	26-57	23-54
3-point:	8-21	7-16
Free throws:	17-21	12-17
Rebounds:	32	32
Assists:	17	18
Turnovers:	14	19

Although K-State trailed Marquette (22-11) 39-38 at halftime, the Wildcats stayed close, buoyed by Dietz's three-point shooting and by 12 points off 13 Golden Eagle turnovers.

"The whole game it was just possession by possession, and we were just back and forth the whole time," said Dietz, who scored a game-high 21 points.

In the second half, K-State and Marquette continued to battle back and forth and were tied 58-58 with 7:54 left to play, but Dietz's fifth 3-pointer of the game at the 7:26 mark gave the Wildcats the lead for good.

Sparked by Dietz's three, the Wildcats went on a 9-0 run to pull ahead 67-58 with four minutes remaining and went 8-of-9 from the free-throw line down the stretch to seal the win.

"Relative to the nature of the game, at about that seven-minute mark, we just demonstrated how we can run and refused to let Marquette back in the door," Patterson said.

Junior Twiggy McIntyre was the third Wildcat in double figures with 16 points, and freshman Danielle Zanotti grabbed five rebounds to help propel K-State to the championship win.

Dietz said the Wildcats' WNIT run gives K-State motivation and confidence heading into the 2006-07 season.

"This young team has so much to look forward to, and we know we can compete with anybody," Dietz said.

Wildcats back a step or two.

Case in point: The Wildcats were picked to finish behind Kansas in the Big 12 Conference by the Associated Press, even after the Wildcats had swept the Jayhawks the last four years in a row.

However, losing such a wealth of talent did something other than make K-State falter, as everyone assumed it would.

It brought out the team in the Wildcats.

"We came into this season knowing that this team was really going to show what being a true team was," junior guard Twiggy McIntyre said. "We lost All-Americans, WNBA All-Stars, and really didn't have that one particular go-to player.

"We're just a team. Everyone depends on each other every single practice, every single day. No one's above anyone and we're just the epitome of what a team is."

Don't get me wrong – the Wildcats were not better off without Wecker, Koehn and Mahoney. Such a claim would qualify me for the loony bin.

However, K-State simply figured out how to win games differently.

The Wildcats played together, never knowing who was going to carry them to their next win but always finding a way to win more than they lost.

How does the saying go? A rising tide raises all ships.

Oh sure, K-State struggled at times en route to its 24-10 final record. The Wildcats sometimes had a nasty habit of letting big second-half leads slip away, which probably cost them an NCAA Tournament berth.

But looking back, K-State stood to gain more from its WNIT appearance than it did from a probable early-round exit from the NCAA field.

During their championship run through the WNIT, the Wildcats found themselves.

"We have such a greater understanding now of who we are," coach Deb Patterson said. "We've established an identity of being a true team and of being very tough and of being able to play a lot of ways and to compete against a lot of styles very well.

"When we started this season and maybe even early in Big 12 Conference play all the way through January, we were still working to create an identity, and I think this championship and this opportunity to compete in it has defined the kind of team we're going to be – mentally and physically very tough."

I expect the Wildcats to use this championship and parlay it into many successful seasons, which include NCAA Tournament runs, not WNIT appearances.

I just wish I could be around to cover the team when it hoists its next trophy.

HOW TO PLAY 7-CARD TEXAS HOLD'EM

Texas Hold'em poker is a card game. It is played with a typical 52-card deck. Hold'em can be played with as few as two players (going "heads up"), up to a maximum of 11 players. The object of the game is to create the best five-card poker hand using any combination of two of your own cards and five communal cards.

1. PREFLOP

Starting with the dealer, each person is dealt one card, and then a second card. Both cards are face-down. After everyone receives their pocket/hole cards (the two face-down cards), they can start betting.

2. FLOP

The dealer turns over three cards in the middle of the table (called "the flop"). These are community cards each player uses to create the best hand. Betting occurs again.

3. TURN

The dealer turns over another card, making four community cards. This fourth card is called "the turn" or sometimes "fourth street." Betting occurs again.

4. RIVER

The dealer turns over the fifth and last community card. This is called "the river" or "fifth street". Betting occurs for the last time.

5. SHOWDOWN

The remaining players in the hand show their cards in order from the person who bet first. Each player uses two cards and the five community cards to create the best hand (five cards total). When all five cards in the community make the best hand, everyone splits the pot. This is called "the board plays." Any time during the game a player can fold and leave the hand. All bets are lost at that point.

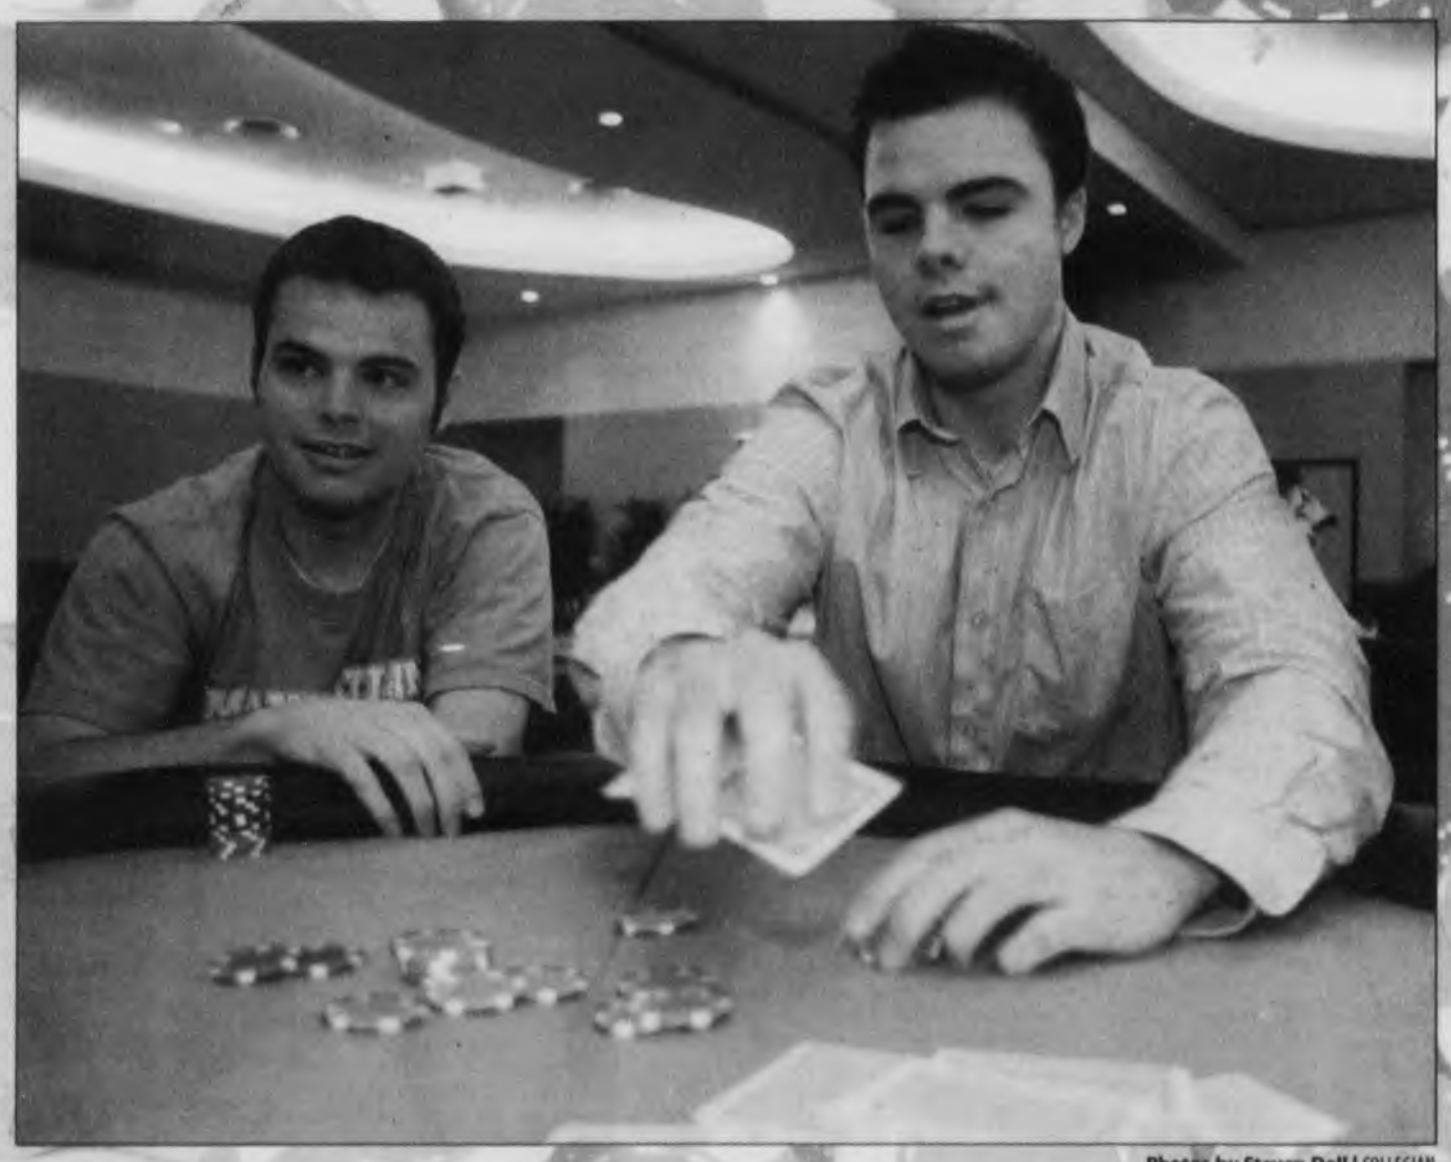
Poker etiquette checklist

1. Do not reveal your cards during a hand. While it's not against the rules (some places give a penalty), it is at least a horrible breach of etiquette.

2. If you folded and your cards would have made a great hand on the flop, don't reel back in your chair or bang your hand off of the table or let your jaw hang open, letting everyone know you would have hit that flop. In fact, don't respond to the cards on the board at all.



3. Don't be rude, criticize an opponent's play or be verbally abusive to another player.

4. Don't blame the dealer. Also, don't wing your cards at the dealer or not tip him as a result of previous bad beat. They have no control over what cards are dealt.

5. Do not talk about a hand when you aren't in it. Giving advice to a live player actually is against the rules in most places.

Raking in the chips

Derek Bembry, freshman in business administration pre-professional, right, collects the chips he won from the table after a hand of Texas Hold'em poker. He played in a tournament Friday evening in the ballroom of the K-State Student Union.

175 players compete for prizes in 3-hour UPC poker tourney

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of chips clunk together like a ceramics factory in an earthquake while dozens of gamblers stare unemotionally at the loot on the table and wait for the next card.

Somewhere a chair is pushed back and cigars have to be physically restrained from immolating themselves and leaping into waiting jaws. It's poker night gone large.

Friday saw Texas Hold'em, the game that brought poker back into the spotlight, offered by the Union Program Council and AfterHours.

Sarah Morton, junior in accounting and AfterHours co-chair, manned the front desk and organized preparations for the event.

Getting 175 people together for poker every semester isn't exactly poker night at Billy Bob's. The UPC and AfterHours spent months planning the event. In fact, the UPC already has started preparation for the next poker tournament – in fall 2006.

The final sprint leading up to the event lasts about two weeks. It is when prizes, graphics and last minute details are secured, Morton said.

The event is sponsored in part by www.barpoker.com, a local business that provided cards, chips and Ryan Guthrie.

Guthrie, a former K-State student, said the business saw the growing popularity of Texas Hold'em and opportunity.

The business sets up and has tournaments around the country, and, apparently, the idea took.

Or, in Guthrie's words, "it caught on like wildfire."

Guthrie said the Manhattan-based business operates in Missouri, Texas, Arkansas and Florida and is hosting a charity circuit tournament that has the business working in Nebraska.

At AfterHours, the process of narrowing 175 players down to one started at 7 p.m. Everyone started with the same number of chips, and the tournament was free to enter.

Every half-hour the blinds were doubled, meaning every half-hour the costs of entering a hand doubled, and as the night wore on, the trickle of people stepping away from their tables turned into a steady stream flowing out the door as luck ebbed and flowed for each player.

The noise broke occasionally as a table erupted in cheers – celebration for a stellar comeback or a player gone kaput.

At one table a player stood up. From another table, a player looked at him and asked simply, "Out?" to which he replied "Yeah." Only 150 more to go.

If the population of a table dropped too low, those still standing moved to a more crowded table. Such as Audrea Westfall, senior in speech pathology, who emerged the sole survivor of a table-clearing hand.

Shortly after she found a seat, the games were put on hold. The Union staff wheeled out some tortilla chips and toppings and left the food to fend for itself.

At 10 p.m. Jason Howland, freshman in psychology, knocked out three people in one hand, reducing play to four tables.

Thirty minutes later, the tables were reduced to one.

One of them, Courtney Bower, senior in public relations, came to the table with one chip to his name, while others had a mountain of chips.

Once the cards were dealt the players turned silent, and then, one by one, found themselves chipless.

Bower and his one chip outlasted some, but he went down third.

Kevin Miller, junior in electrical engineering, was out second-to-last. Third place netted him a $25 Target gift card.

At 11:05 p.m., Amos was beaten by Taylor's two pair. Amos took home a $50 Target gift card. Taylor got a Sony PlayStation Portable and the wish that the almost $180,000 worth of chips he won were redeemable.

Taylor offered no formula for expert card-sharkery. He said while he does go to casinos and plays blackjack there, his experience only stretches back about a year.

"It's the first one I've actually won that's this big, by far," he said.

Though the K-State champion, Taylor said he does not foresee trying his luck elsewhere.

He did, however, share one of his strategies.

"Keep them guessing; that's really all you can do," Taylor said. "If you can keep your opponents guessing as to what you've got, then you've got them."

According to Taylor, the next K-State tournament will undoubtedly see his poker face, but as cards shift, he is not taking an bets on himself for good or bad.

"I didn't plan on winning this one. I didn't even plan on making it to the final table."

But, what of the unlucky, the bad players or the curious who want to try their hand?

"Just come," Taylor said. "I didn't think I'd win. I just came out to waste some time, and I won."

The finalists in the poker tournament compete for the win at the finals table Friday night. Darin Taylor, junior in pre-professional architectural engineering, third from left, won the tournament and received a PlayStation Portable.

Fashion show struts styles from around the globe

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sarees, kimonos and line dancing. What sounds like a melting pot of cultures was actually just that at 7 p.m., Monday night, in a full-capacity Forum Hall.

The International Coordinating Council and the Union Program Council sponsored the International Fashion Show, which represented more than 20 countries.

The show was moderated by Kabita Ghimire, graduate student in geography, and Kiran Chaturvedi, graduate student in medicine.

"K-State is a mosaic of styles and beliefs," Ghimire said. "There are obvious differences between cultures, and we are exploring these differences through textiles from around the globe to both experience and appreciate them."

Many of the models represented colors with significance. For example, in Vietnam, white is worn on high school and college students, which represents purity and innocence, while red is worn for weddings and for good luck. Other colors are worn just for fun.

Other models wore clothing that veered off tradition and was modernized for comfort and convenience. In India, the traditional "soree" has been turned into a more modern look for young women. Women today would wear pleated and loose-fitting pants, a long, fitted shirt, and a draped scarf. Color is very important, and the models displayed that with their bright clothing.

The show was also highlighted with numerous performances by various groups on campus. The show opened with a Taiwani contemporary pop song, entitled "Prejudiced Love."

Mariko Price, performed a Spanish folk dance called "Sevillanas" which was a flowing and graceful tribute to Spain. The KSU Juggling Club also made an appearance, with four of its members doing complex tricks with balls and batons.

Dristi Bhandari did a Nepali dance, which was said to be a popular song describing the county; it was performed barefoot. This was followed with a belly dance by two girls adorned in bangles and bright colors.

The final two performances were a tribute to American history. The first was an American folk medley of voices combined with a banjo, guitar and violin. This was followed by an American line dance, performed by 15 dancers.

Melanie Graber, along with the two moderators, was in charge of preparation for the event.

"The show was started by a group called 'World Friendship' 30 years ago, by faculty

RCPD investigates alleged rape of a local woman

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An incident of forcible rape allegedly occurred in southwest Manhattan Saturday morning, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

The alleged victim is a 22-year-old female, and the alleged attacker is a person known to her, Quintanar said.

The alleged incident occurred between 3 and 5:30 a.m. Saturday and was reported to police at 6:35 a.m., Quintanar said.

No arrests have been made, and the investigation is still ongoing, Quintanar said.

"This definitely is not related to all the other rapes," Quintanar said.

KSU Foundation employee arrested

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Myrna Gleue, Pet Trust Program Coordinator for the KSU Foundation, was arrested Friday on a warrant for a charge of computer trespassing, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

The case is a result of an investigation by the K-State Police Department into the misuse of computers at the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"I think she was formerly an employee there," Capt. Troy Lane of the K-State Police said.

The investigation took place in January, Lane said.

The delay in charges being filed was due to the fact that the evidence found by Campus police needed to be sent to a judge, who determined whether there was enough to proceed, Lane said.

Since the City of Manhattan doesn't have an ordinance for computer crimes, the investigation was sent to Riley County, he said.

In this particular case, computer crimes is the actual Kansas Legislature statute, Lane said.

According to the Kansas Legislature, a computer

Uhlarik faces 6 counts for drugs

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

John Uhlarik, professor of psychology, was arrested Friday on six misdemeanor counts for drug charges, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department said.

"Five counts were for possession of drug paraphernalia, and one count was for possession of marijuana," Quintanar said.

Bond was set at $2,000.

Uhlarik was suspended from K-State with pay, following his first arrest for stalking, which occurred in May of 2004.

Uhlarik, a professor at K-State since 1970, was arrested and charged with stalking and violation of a protective order in March of this year.

An official statement through the university, following Uhlarik's second arrest, said K-State will continue to monitor the legal proceedings and will make future determinations as they are warranted.

K-State President Jon Wefald's office had no comment about Uhlarik's most recent arrest.

2 arrested on drug charges

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two men were arrested Sunday on felony and misdemeanor drug charges.

Jonathan Roper, Baldwin City, Kan., and Anthony Pearce, 1300 Marlatt Ave, Apt. 602, were arrested for the attempted distribution of marijuana and cocaine in the Manhattan and Riley County area, according to a Riley County Police Department press release.

The investigation led to a search warrant for Pearce's apartment.

Roper was charged with sale of cocaine, sale of marijuana, unlawful use of a telephonic device, and unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds, all felonies and possession of marijuana, a misdemeanor.

Bond was set for Roper at $10,000.

Pearce was arrested on two counts of possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia, both felonies.

The possession of drug paraphernalia also carries an additional misdemeanor charge.

Pearce's bond was also set at $10,000.

RCPD officers recovered small amounts of marijuana, drug paraphernalia and more than $5,000 in cash.

These arrests were not related to Operation Little Apple, which was an investigation by local, state and federal authorities into the sale of illegal drugs in Manhattan, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

School bus driver passes out at wheel

GODDARD, Kan. — A 58-year-old bus driver for the Goddard School District died Monday after the vehicle he was driving veered off the road and came to a stop in a field. Nine students were on the bus, and none were hurt. The Sedgwick County sheriff's department said the driver stopped breathing and passed out at the wheel. Students on the bus called the bus barn for help from the on-board radio.

Storms leave 27 dead

NEWBERN, Tenn. — Thunderstorms packing tornadoes and hail as big as softballs ripped through eight Midwestern states, killing at least 27 people, injuring scores and destroying hundreds of homes. Tennessee was hit hardest, with tornadoes striking five western counties Sunday and killing 23 people.

Supreme Court rejects war powers challenge

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A divided Supreme Court on Monday rejected an appeal from Jose Padilla, held as an enemy combatant without traditional legal rights for more than three years. Padilla was moved in January to Miami to face criminal charges, and the government argued that the appeal over his indefinite detention was now pointless.

Headlines from the nation's universities

NYU student goes on hunger strike

NEW YORK – New York University sophomore Dan Breindel was almost an eighth of the way there. Wearing a blue shirt and tie with basketball shorts, Breindel looked out from under his cap to anyone who would pay attention.

Since receiving his housing assignment on Wednesday – he was placed in the 26th Street residence hall, even though he did not select it – he vowed to consume only water and Centrum multivitamins.

By day four, he looked fatigued yet he continued to sit in Bobst Library despite his "deteriorating health," he said. On the way home that evening, he passed out on the NYU bus, which prompted him to eat, thus ending the strike.

"It's not about me," said Breindel. "What I am asking for is that the administration admits that there is a problem with housing."

Since he began his strike, Breindel has met with top housing administrators, appealing his case and explaining his motives.

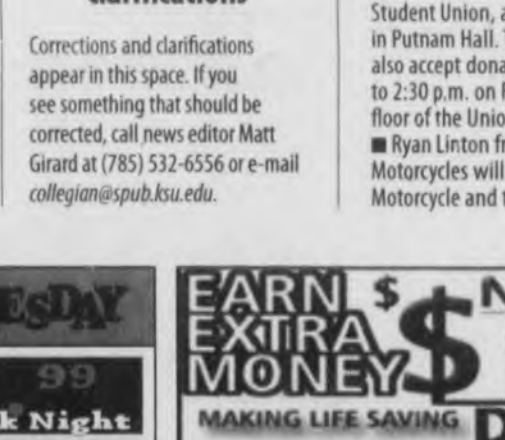

Illustration by Elvis Achelpohl | COLLEGIAN

When he met with Marc Wais, the vice president for student affairs, Breindel said he was shown "compassion on the personal level."

"We take seriously any feedback we receive from any student regarding their experience here at NYU," Wais told WSN.

PROFESSORS SHARE E-MAIL ISSUES

DEKALB, Ill. – With seemingly the whole world centered on the Internet, it is no surprise e-mail has become a popular form of communication.

However, some students fail to realize how they come off in an e-mail, and it can affect how they are perceived by professors.

"Many students have no idea how their e-mails read," said Marvin Hill, Northern Illinois University professor of business administration.

While e-mail does allow students to contact teachers outside of class, some fail to use proper English, punctuation or tone, which might lower the professor's opinion of the student.

"My biggest gripe about student e-mails is the lack of attention paid to basic grammar and spelling," said Kay Forest, associate professor and chair of the sociology department.

While Hill does not have specific guidelines, he has received inappropriate e-mails.

"For example, 'I missed class today. Did you cover anything important?'" Hill said. "The response: 'No, we didn't cover anything important, just went in and talked about unimportant material that we intend to include on the exam.'"

Retiree walks to maintain health

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Bill Carson, from left, Susan Peterson and Leola Smith, all residents of Manhattan, walk a path around Anneburg Park while participating in the Walk Kansas program Friday afternoon.

Steven Doll
COLLEGIAN

Retired Manhattan resident Bill Carson was in trouble.

At 5 feet, 8 inches, Carson weighed around 225 pounds and had been diagnosed with diabetes. Doctors told him he was setting himself up for a heart attack, but he didn't listen.

One day Carson decided it was time for a change of lifestyle. He became active in a nutritional program, but the weight still wasn't dropping. Then Carson learned about the Walk Kansas Program.

Two years after joining the program at the age of 67, Carson said he has slimmed down to 145 pounds.

"I just made that decision to change, and that's what I have done, and I have stuck with it," Carson said.

Walk Kansas is an eight-week program that encourages teams of six to collectively walk 423 miles, or the distance it would take to walk across Kansas.

Carson said he walks six miles every morning, four miles in the afternoon, and then later he walks with his Walk Kansas friends at local parks. The program started March 11, and Carson said he has contributed 176 miles.

Carson said he even walked to and from his eye surgery. After having a bone marrow procedure done, he walked around a zoo for hours.

"I just really enjoy it – the walking is so relaxing," Carson said. "On a stressful day it gets your mind off of things, and that fresh air is just great."

Walk Kansas also concentrates on promoting healthier eating. Carson said as a result of being more active and eating healthier, doctors lowered his diabetes medication to the lowest dosage.

"This has really helped me manage my diabetes," he said.

Carson said he has made friends throughout the program that help him to stick with it.

"Some days you just don't feel like going out, but you have to stay with it for your team," he said.

Carson and his friends generally walk around local parks but sometimes they walk around Wal-Mart or the mall.

"You can always find a place to walk if you really try," Carson said.

Retired Manhattan resident Leola Smith is one of Bill's walking partners. She said she and Bill walk together about five times a week and that she enjoys walking with him.

"He always wants to (walk)," Smith said. "And he just really likes to do it, and he never complains."

Sharolyn Jackson, a Walk Kansas coordinator, has known Bill for around three years and said he has been a motivation.

"He is just positive in a way that really makes people realize that if you have health problems you can still lead a happy life, and that you can do that through being more healthy," Jackson said.

Carson said his future plans include staying positive, staying active with the program and to keep on walking.

"You can sit around and get depressed about having diabetes or you can do something about it," Carson said. "You know you're not going to be cured, but you should keep working at controlling it."

RCPD officer prevents woman's suicide attempt

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Det. Richard Lewis of the Riley County Police Department is going to be recommended for a life-saving award, after he prevented a woman from committing suicide Friday, Capt. Brad Schoen of the RCPD said.

A woman was sitting on the railing of the Kansas Highway 177 viaduct and was apparently suicidal, Schoen said.

"She was getting ready to go," Schoen said.

Lewis had to forcibly pull the woman back from the railing, Schoen said.

Lewis was off-duty, when he was returning home from his son's track meet. He was crossing the Kansas Highway 177 viaduct, when he saw a woman approximately in her 40s on the ledge, Lewis said.

"The lady was sitting on the very top edge of the concrete pier and leaning over the edge of the water," Lewis said.

He drove to the end of the bridge and turned around, driving back to the woman. He immediately called 911 for help.

Leaving his wife in the car, he got out and engaged the woman in conversation, he said.

She asked if he was a police officer, and he said no, he was just concerned, he said.

After talking for a while, he realized he would have to intervene, Lewis said.

The woman began crying, closed her eyes and passing her hand over her face, Lewis said.

He was unsure if she was wiping tears away, but he grabbed her shirt and wrapped his arm around her waist, pulling her back off the ledge.

The woman was transported to Mercy Regional Health Center.

State prepares for possible bird flu

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The avian flu could make its way to Kansas, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Web site.

If there is an outbreak of avian flu the health department will follow the plan set by the Kansas Department of Health and Education, Charles Murphy, health officer and administrator of the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, said.

The Riley County-Manhattan Health Department received the initial planning funds for the pandemic committee Friday.

According to PandemicFlu.gov, Kansas will receive more than $1 million from the Department of Health and Human Services for pandemic planning.

Murphy said the county health department has been working on a plan prior to receiving the latest funding.

"We have been working on a local plan for a number of months, but we only recently received gratification that local planning processes will take place specifically for the avian flu," he said.

Avian flu infects all types of birds and is caused by a virus that infects wild birds and can spread to domestic poultry and pet birds, according to the Kansas Department of Health and Education Web site.

There are two different forms of the avian flu, according to the Web site. One is the low path bird flu, which is more common and does not affect humans.

The other is a high path bird flu, which is more easily transmitted and fatal to birds.

Murphy said the community will have to pay attention to the bird population.

"I think the community will have to make some adjustments if we find it in the bird population," he said. "I think we're prepared to deal with that situation."

FAST FACTS

An estimated 200 million United States citizens would be infected if there were an outbreak. About 314,000 to 733,000 would be hospitalized and up to 207,000 will die.

In Kansas, an estimated 4,600 to 10,700 citizens would be hospitalized and up to 2,500 will die if there were an outbreak.

Source: Kansas Department of Health and Environment. The statistics are based on a possible U.S. avian flu outbreak in a six- to eight-week time frame.

However, if the flu were to change and be able to be transmitted among humans, Murphy said there would be problems for the human population.

"If this virus mutates, we would have a very serious pandemic on our hands," he said.

Carol Kennedy, director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center, said Lafene would get its information from the local health department.

Dr. Gretchen Cole, intern at the Veterinary Medicine Teaching Hospital, said most birds are at risk for the avian flu.

"The first birds to be affected would be wild birds because they can transmit it from place-to-place," she said.

Although pet birds are not easily affected, Cole said they should be closely watched.

"There isn't anything we can do other than prevent them from exposure to wild birds," she said. "For outdoor birds such as chickens, keep them as isolated as possible.

"Keep secretions that could possibly be from other birds away, that would be an important step because the flu is transmitted through saliva and feces."

Meagan Boddy, sophomore in social science, said she is not worried about the pandemic.

"It's too far away to get all the way to Kansas," she said. "If it were in the United States, it would be closer to home and maybe I would be concerned."

TO THE POINT

University should prepare for outbreak

According to the Centers for Disease Control, the avian flu is on its way to the United States.

It is estimated the flu will infect 200 million humans in the United States, and it will kill about 2,500 humans in Kansas alone, according to the Pandemic Flu Web site.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

While the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department has its own plan of action, and the state of Kansas will receive $1 million in funding, K-State should take its own initiative in planning for the pandemic.

K-State is widely known for its College of Agriculture and its College of Veterinary Medicine. Both of these colleges should be accountable for the way K-State prepares for the avian flu.

K-State Research and Extension, which is affiliated with the College of Agriculture, should conduct research about the possible avian flu pandemic in Kansas and ways the university can prevent it.

The College of Veterinary Medicine should also work to develop measures that keep infected birds away from wild birds that could have the flu.

K-State should be just as responsible for its actions toward the avian flu as other state and national health departments.

Digital love

Online dating should be pursued with caution

JACI BOYDSTON

The days are getting longer, the weather is getting warmer, and the freedom of summer vacation is peeking up from on the horizon.

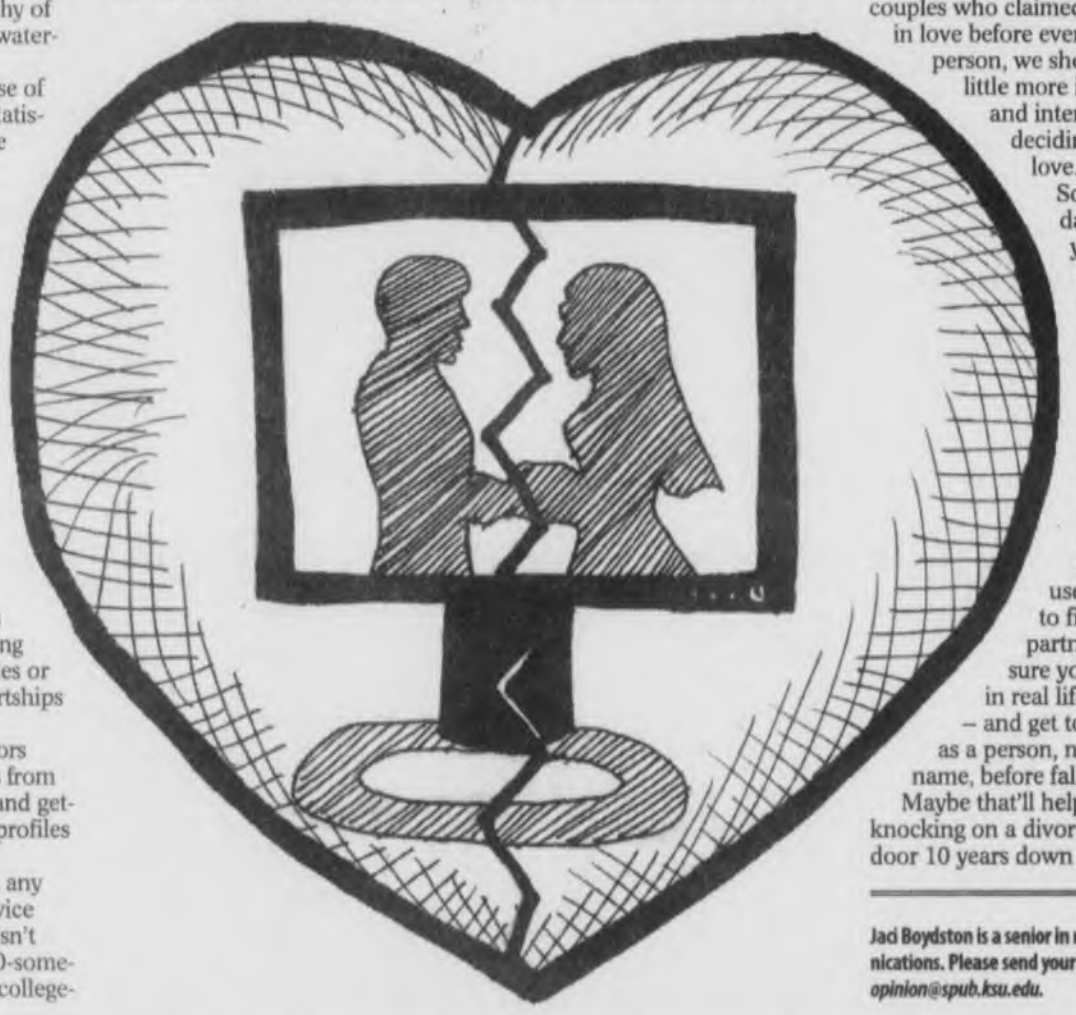
What does this mean, besides a three-month break from classes?

Wedding season is upon us.

Although many of our friends will happily walk down the aisle into a lifetime of wedded bliss, 43-60 percent of them (depending on which statistics you prefer) will end their marriages years shy of that "til death do us part" watermark.

Perhaps partially because of those depressing divorce statistics, more and more people are turning to alternative ways to find the loves of their lives. In the 10 or so years since the Internet has become a popular mass medium, more than 2 million Americans have found their spouses online, according to an April 1 Wall Street Journal report.

However, as the earliest of these marriages begin to hit their 10-year anniversaries, many are also beginning to dissolve. According to the same report, many divorce cases stemming from online dating cite dishonest online profiles or lies told during online courtships as reasons for divorce.



Other contributing factors include quick progressions from online dating to marriage and getting to know each other's profiles rather than personalities.

A quick search through any Internet matchmaking service reveals that online dating isn't just a hobby for 30- and 40-somethings; there are plenty of college-aged people looking for virtual romance. That, coupled with many students' apparent perceptions that it's necessary to be engaged by graduation, provides plenty of reasons to be cautious when pursuing e-love.

To learn more about the online dating landscape, I visited www.eHarmony.com, the matchmaking service that brags about matching couples on 29 levels of compatibility.

Twenty minutes into filling out my free personality profile, I gave up – it was just too complicated. And the data collected – such as self-assessments of personality traits like cleverness, attractiveness and charm and whether or not you agree with statements such as, "I tend to think outside the box" – doesn't seem very well-suited to match people for a lifetime.

Online dating isn't inherently bad; it just isn't likely to work out significantly better than doing it the old-fashioned way. People seem to get into trouble by assuming, since online dating involves lots of conversations and communication up front, couples get to know each other better than they would through conventional dating. However, getting to know how individuals present themselves to strangers online isn't remotely the same as learning what they're like among real people in the real world.

As Internet-matched couples begin heading to divorce attorneys, it might be worth remembering that the Internet can be a good way to meet people but not the best way to get to know them. Instead of being like the 11 percent of www.Match.com married couples who claimed to have been in love before ever meeting in person, we should want a little more information and interaction before deciding we're in love.

So, if online dating is your thing, remember that there's a difference between meeting someone online and getting a reliable picture of who they are. If you really want to use the Internet to find long-term partners, make sure you meet them in real life – safely – and get to know them as a person, not a screen name, before falling in love. Maybe that'll help you avoid knocking on a divorce lawyer's door 10 years down the road.

Preemptive crime control oversteps boundary

JONAS HOGG

Down on the information superhighway floats the interesting tidbit that Texas cops are now arresting people in bars for the crime of being drunk – in a bar.

Have these people nothing better to do?

Surely, somewhere, there is traffic that needs playing in.

The legality of undercover cops warrantlessly lolling about private business is not mentioned, though it should be.

Though tooth-grindingly enraging this continuation of liberty's downward plummet is not wholly unexpected. For, low and behold, Austin, Texas, as well as El Paso, Dallas, San Antonio, Arlington, Plano and Corpus Christi all have their very own "smoke-free workplace legislation."

The term should harbor familiarity; Clean Air Manhattan, a local group, is advocating the banning of smoking in private restaurants and bars and more "smoke-free workplace legislation."

Clean Air Manhattan is adopting the same strategy that clean-air groups everywhere have used. It's impressive; the anti-smoking groups have switched decks in the middle of the game, with everyone watching. The sheer blatant, cheaterness of it all has to be applauded.

Clean-air advocacy groups have effectively redefined private property as public. Just like that, thousands of years of legal standards concerning private property thrown out the window right in front of us, and we let them do it without raising a peep.

However, as the clean air celebrations abate, we are faced with the ugly, ugly fact that having (unwillingly) invited legislation onto our private property we now have no way to get them off. They also keep inviting more and more friends, all of whom resemble your friend's hysterically over-protective mother.

As the legislative party enters session, the banshee cry of the over-protective opens the door to the unlimited potential for new laws; "Stop. Somebody's going to get hurt."

It is this mantra that has prompted the Texas Alcohol Commission to send undercover officers into bars.

If you doubt me, I'll turn to TAC spokeswoman Carolyn Beck, who told a Reuter's reporter, "We feel that the only way we're going to get at the drunk driving problem and the problem of people hurting each other while drunk is by crackdowns like this."

The only way to stop people hurting each other, is to arrest them before they have the chance? Brilliant. Like giving someone a speeding ticket because they're running late to class. They're obviously in a hurry, right? It's only logical that someone running to class will later jump in a car and zoom around old people while running over expecting mothers.

Preemptive enforcement. Get it? It's like preemptive war.

If you're looking for any continuity to all of this (let me know if you find it), it's that Beck also said being in a private bar does not exempt you from state laws against public drunkenness.

See? The line is blurred. Anti-smoking groups redefined the law so that anything can fall under the category of public. Already there are whispers about banning smoking outside altogether in some places, even on your own lawn. Because it's public, you see?

So in exchange for our liberties, we can now be arrested to prevent a crime that we might commit. Barring that we're arrested "for our own good" to keep us from, possibly, hurting ourselves; is this not insane?

I doubt Clean Air Manhattan has these extremes in mind, but they should – we all should. Because once the floodgates of new legislation are opened, the lawmakers see to it that we all become criminals.

Exhibit celebrates world cultures, traditions for International Week

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cultural entertainment and education were the focus of an interactive exhibition Monday in the K-State Student Union Courtyard.

The exhibition marked the beginning of K-State's International Week, an event sponsored by the International Coordinating Council to celebrate international students and their cultures.

The exhibition featured booths representing many different countries, including the Philippines, Taiwan and Sri Lanka. Colorful displays at each table included articles of traditional clothing and art, and contained information about each country's history, geography, religion and culture.

Representatives at each booth were also present to answer questions and talk about the artifacts on display.

Each booth in the exhibit was evaluated for a competition by a team of faculty judges. A first- and second-prize winner will be announced during the International Talent Show on Friday.

Phuong Vu, sophomore in political science, greeted visitors at the Vietnamese Student Association's booth on Vietnam. Vu said he was pleased to see a lot of people exploring the exhibit and enjoyed talking to visitors at his booth.

"For me, it's about the people," he said. "It's fun to compare different countries – the food, the language. It's great to see a lot of people learning about other cultures."

Live music performances, exotic food and shopping also drew many curious onlookers to the exhibit in the Courtyard.

Sheena Nagaraja, senior in biology, and Avila Anna, senior in kinesiology, listened to a musician perform a traditional song from the Philippines as they waited in line to sample an array of ethnic dishes being served at the event.

"I heard that there was going to be a lot of international food, and I wanted to try it," Nagaraja said.

The women said they enjoyed the exhibit's live music performances and colorful artwork the most.

"I heard the music upstairs," Avila said, "and then I saw that there were a lot of displays up from different countries."

Nagaraja said they also planned to visit a nearby sale sponsored by Ten Thousand Villages, a non-profit organization that buys artifacts from artisans in developing countries.

Nagaraja said she hoped that a variety of students, not just international students, would take the time to visit the cultural exhibit.

"It is such a unique experience for students from Kansas to have all of these different cultures gathered here in one place," she said. "It is actually really interesting to see how similar it all is and surprising."

Heart Walk informs about heart disease, raises funds

Editor,

Heart disease and strokes claim more lives than any other disease, putting people of all ages – from infants to the elderly – at risk. More than 32 percent of all deaths in Riley County are related to heart disease.

Chances are you or someone you know has been affected by heart disease or stroke. Now is the time to "change tomorrow, today" and step into action at this year's Manhattan/Wamego American Heart Association Heart Walk/Fun Run. We encourage all citizens to show their support at 8:30 a.m. April 22 at City Park in Manhattan.

Anyone can join in the walk. Many area businesses are joining in the fight against heart disease by organizing company Heart Walk teams.

Help us fund more discoveries that might save the life of someone you know.

Huggins' presence should be celebrated

Editor,

All of you true Midwesterners in Kansas do not yet know how lucky you are.

If you do not yet have season K-State basketball tickets, donate your money to the school and buy your tickets now. If you can get them in the first few rows, buy them now, because in two years your friend will be begging you for a piece of your action. Can you say Sweet 16? Elite 8? Final 4? Man, can this guy coach relentless defense. Get ready.

Cincinnati Bearcat fans mourn our loss and your gain. Besides being an unbelievable coach, mentor, ambassador, husband and father, Bob Huggins (despite what the vile national press has painted and wants all to think) is an unbelievable human being who cares about college kids and their future.

He made the same mistake twice and got caught. Driving and drinking, an inexcusable mistake, but he paid the price, and most forgave him. He does have a few warts, which are hopefully in the past. Do any of you live in a glass house?

Huggins is that good to have a 50-year-old professional with four kids and a wife leave his hometown of 50 years and start a new life just to see some unbelievable basketball.

P.S. If any of the current K-State players are mentally weak, do not count on them for next year. Your worst U.S. Marine drill sergeant nightmare is a patsy compared to Huggins in practice.

With fond basketball memories,

Scalia deserves privacy from media when attending mass

Editor,

U.S. Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia, a conservative force to be reckoned with, is in trouble with the Boston Herald.

A Herald photographer spotted Scalia and his wife leaving mass. A reporter asked Scalia if he saw a conflict between his devout faith and his job.

Scalia made an Italian gesture (he's an Italian-American) and declared that his faith was his own business.

Scalia wrote a letter to the Herald explaining the gesture meant, "Leave me alone."

This controversy should trouble Americans.

Scalia should attend mass whenever he chooses. He and his wife should not have to deal with obnoxious reporters while traveling.

It doesn't encourage the Supreme Court to operate more transparently when the media hounds its members in their private lives – the justices deserve our respect and media privacy for their hard work.

Tennis team wins 2

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team had to stay on its toes all weekend.

Late injuries to two Wildcats forced last-minute lineup changes.

Survival was all that mattered, coach Steve Bietau said.

"I am really happy that we got through this weekend with two wins," Bietau said. "It was important for us to keep any kind of NCAA (tournament) hopes alive and just to stay in the thick of the conference race."

K-State began Saturday, defeating Big 12 Conference opponent Iowa State 7-0.

The Cyclones, 0-6 in conference play, were not a big concern, freshman Katerina Kudlackova said.

"I think we were supposed to win this match, and we did," Kudlackova said.

However, Iowa State was able to split sets in two matches and keep the scores close in other matches early on.

Iowa State's Danielle Uscinksi led Kudlackova 4-1 in the first set, before Kudlackova won five-consecutive games to win the first set 6-4, followed by a 6-1 victory in the second match.

"I played horrible in the beginning," Kudlackova said. "I was not able to play the ball well, and then I started to move more."

Freshman Maria Perevoschikova dropped out of singles play, due to an injury to her leg, after playing doubles.

"We could have played her (Saturday), but we knew that we would need her against Oklahoma, so we did not want to risk anything," Bietau said.

Sophomore Fernanda Da Valle won her fifth consecutive singles match, defeating Iowa State's Beth Chermel (6-0, 6-2).

"I think I am more focused now, and I am doing what the coaches are telling me to do," Da Valle said.

Senior Jessica Simosa broke a three-game losing streak with a split-set victory against Kara Hickey (6-7(5-7), 6-0, 10-6).

"I lost the first set because I wasn't playing my game," Simosa said. "I had to take some risks to get myself going."

Bad weather on Sunday forced the Oklahoma match indoors to Ahearn Field House.

Sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia injured her ankle in warm ups, right before the Wildcats began doubles play.

Kvaratskhelia said she instantly thought about what her injury meant to the match.

"I am the No. 1 singles player and on the No. 1 doubles team, so I feel really responsible for how the team does," Kvaratskhelia said.

K-State started by winning a hard fought doubles point, with all the matches being locked at 7-7 at one point.

"All the doubles matches were really close," Kvaratskhelia said. "Anything could have happened, depending on one or two points."

In singles, everyone had to move up one spot because of the absence of No. 1 player Kvaratskhelia, who said she would have rather played injured.

"I would prefer to play with the pain than to not play at all," Kvaratskhelia said.

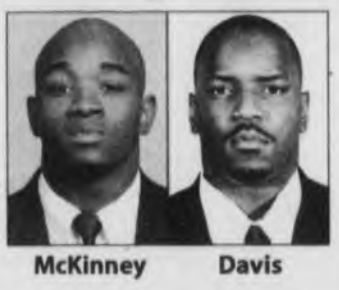
Current, former players arrested

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

One former K-State football player and one current player were arrested over the weekend on separate warrants, according to Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department.

Surrell Davis, senior in social science was arrested early Saturday morning on a warrant from the Riley County Municipal Court for failure to appear, Quintanar said.

Davis was a safety for the K-State football team.



"It was for failure to comply with terms of probation for the offense of theft," Quintanar said.

Bond was set at $750.

Justin McKinney, junior in social science and defensive back for the football team, was arrested in a separate incident on Sunday.

A Riley County Municipal Court warrant was issued for worthless check charges, Quintanar said.

Bond for McKinney was set at $500.

Running backs want to end 'unfinished business' in '06

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Unfinished business.

If there is a common theme with the 2006 K-State running backs as spring practice begins, it is that they return ready to take care of some unsettled affairs.

Take Carlos Alsup.

The Liberal, Kan., native returns for a sixth year after receiving a medical redshirt.

Alsup suffered back-to-back season-ending knee injuries in 2003 and 2004, and after a healthy but relatively quiet year on the field in 2005 in which he ran 30 times for 96 yards and two scores, he returns to a crowded backfield ready to prove himself.

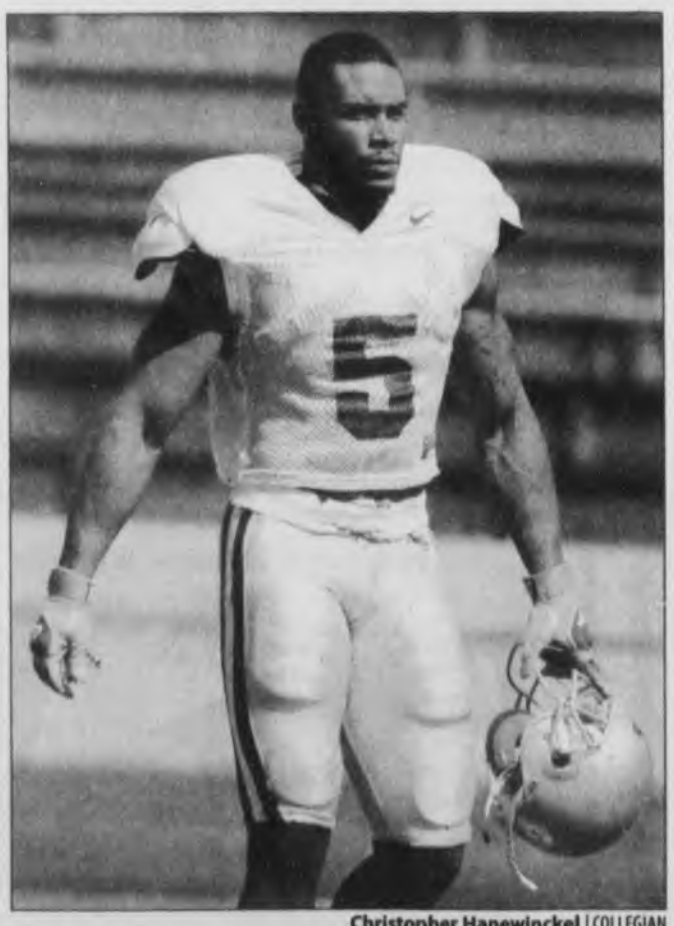
"As the season finished up, and I was talking with Coach (Bill) Snyder and my parents, I felt I had some unfinished business that I had to complete due to the fact that I had been hurt for two years and I missed out on two seasons," Alsup said. "I just wanted to finish my career here with at least two healthy seasons with playing time."

Alsup joins senior Thomas Clayton, K-State's returning starter and leading rusher in 2005, and sophomore Parrish Fisher, who played sparingly at times last year, in a battle to compete for the starting role in new coach Ron Prince's offense.

"As it relates to this offense, he's starting just like everybody else, so he's eager and enthused because sometimes those players who've been around that long sometimes go 'Oh, I've heard this before,'" Prince said.

With the Wildcats expected to switch from an option offense to a more West Coast-type offense, K-State's running backs are all in the same boat as they try to learn Prince and offensive coordinator James Franklin's offense.

"Right now, its a good experience for all three of us," Alsup said. "All three of us are in there working hard and learning a new system. We're finding out new things each day."



As for Clayton, he has some things to set straight as well.

Through K-State's first two games last season against Florida International and Marshall, Clayton led the nation in rushing yards at 164.5 yards per game.

But on Sept. 16, Clayton was arrested on a charge of aggravated battery after a university parking official said Clayton "nearly struck" him with his automobile while he was attempting to put a wheel lock on Clayton's vehicle because of unpaid parking tickets.

Clayton sat out K-State's following game against North Texas, and even though Fisher rushed for 169 yards in Clayton's absence, Clayton and the rest of the Wildcats dropped off once Big 12 Conference play began and never fully recovered.

Over the next five games, Clayton averaged 1.95 yards per carry.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Senior Thomas Clayton will be joined by Carlos Alsup and Parrish Fisher for the 2006 season. He led K-State in rushing last season.

He finished the 2005 season averaging 70.8 yards per game, but Clayton had felt what it was like to be on the top perch of college football's rushing tree, and now, he said, he wants to get there and stay.

"The fact that I was able to lead the nation is more than enough motivation for me," Clayton said. "I also want to be a threat in the receiving game. That's a facet of my game that I'm looking at to be a big part of our offense."

WEBB IS BACK

Prince confirmed Monday that quarterback Allen Webb was back practicing with the team after missing Friday and Saturday's practices.

"Allen was at practice today (Monday), and he did a nice job," Prince said.

No reason for Webb's absences was given, but Prince did say Webb was continuing work at quarterback, and there are no plans to move him to another position.

Track wins 7 event titles at UTEP Springtime Invitational

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two more K-State athletes cleared NCAA Midwest Regional qualifying heights as the Wildcats brought home seven event titles from the UTEP Springtime Invitational at the University of Texas-El Paso in El Paso, Texas.

Senior Breanna Eveland won her second straight pole vault title in the young outdoor season with a clearance of 13 feet, 11.25 inches. The height is a new season-best for the native of Grand Rapids, Mich., and is just two inches short of her K-State outdoor record of 14 feet, 1.25 inches.

Senior Annika Haedt also qualified for the Regional, finishing second to Eveland with a height of 12 feet, 5.2 inches, tying a career best.

Joining Eveland as event winners were junior Candice Mills in the women's 200-meter dash, sophomore Morgan Bonds in the women's 800-meter run, senior Christina Lara in the women's 3,000-meter run, sophomore Marianne Schlachter in the women's triple jump, senior women's Obi Ikwuakor in the shot put and sophomore Bryce Bergman in the men's pole vault.

Mills won the 200 in 24.15 seconds to go along with her second-place finish in the long jump with a wind-aided distance of 19 feet, 10.25 inches. The wind speed for Mill's jump was 2.7 meters per second. Distances are classified as wind-aided when wind speed exceeds 2 meters per second.

Schlachter won her second-straight triple jump title with a wind-aided mark of 43 feet, 11.25 inches (wind speed 4.7 meters per second). The distance ranks as the second-best wind-aided mark in K-State history, trailing Chaytan Hill's 46 feet, 9.75 inch effort in 2004.

Ikwuakor won her first collegiate shot put title with a distance of 44 feet 3.5 inches. The distance for the Arvada, Colo., native is a new personal outdoor career best, beating her previous high of 44-00.75 at the UMKC Invitational in 2005.

Bergman won his first collegiate pole vault title with a height of 16-00.75.

The track team will send a small contingent of athletes to the Texas Relays and the Emporia Relays this coming weekend.

Staff Reports

VLB | Volleyball opens spring schedule 8-2

K-State volleyball started its spring schedule with a 8-2 record on Saturday in Fayetteville, Ark. The Wildcats were led by a pair of redshirt freshmen, Tiffany Johnson and Ginta Gabruseva.

Johnson

The Wildcats were 3-0 against host Arkansas, 2-0 against the Arkansas alumni, 2-1 against Missouri State and 1-1 against Oral Roberts.

TRK | Suggs inducted to Kansas Relays Hall

Former K-State thrower Pinkie Suggs is among the 2006 Kansas Relays Hall of Fame induction class, announced by Kansas Relays meet director, Tim Weaver. Suggs will be inducted with John Outland, Charlie Greene and Karl Salb during a banquet on April 22 at 7 p.m. at the Holiday Inn Holidome in Lawrence, Kan.

Suggs

Suggs is the most decorated female athlete in Kansas Relays history, winning four collegiate shot put and three discus champion watches, three high school shot put titles and two prep discus crowns. Her state record in the shot put has remained unequalled since 1982.

NBA | Hall of Fame taps Barkley, Wilkins, Dumars

INDIANAPOLIS — Charles Barkley and Dominique Wilkins grew up in the deep South, played in the Southeastern Conference and spent more than a decade as two of the NBA's greatest forwards.

Barkley

Now the men with the familiar nicknames and the formidable highlight reels will go into the Basketball Hall of Fame, fittingly, together.

Barkley and Wilkins each got the required 18 votes from the honors committee and will join former Detroit Pistons guard Joe Dumars, Connecticut women's coach Geno Auriemma, Italian coach Sandro Gamba and longtime contributor Dave Gavitt at September's induction in Springfield, Mass.

BKC | Florida wins national championship

Noah

Joakim Noah dominated UCLA with 16 points, nine rebounds and a record seven blocks Monday night to key a blowout.

The championship for Billy Donovan's team comes 10 years after Steve Spurrier led the Gators to a title in that "other" sport. Spurrier is long gone, and the days of Florida being only a football school appear to be, too.

MLB | Royals drop opener

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kenny Rogers helped get Jim Leyland a win in his first game as the Detroit Tigers' manager.

Rogers combined with two relievers on a four-hitter, and the Tigers began the season with a 3-1 victory against the Kansas City Royals on Monday.

"Fox Confessor Brings the Flood"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

Unless you align yourself with the hardcore country-philes, chances are you have little respect for modern country music. Frankly, I don't blame you, or the rest of the hoi polloi, for despising country music.

With few exceptions, modern country has laughably become a parody of itself.

While I worked during spring break, I had the misfortune of almost non-stop exposure to the local country music stations – my co-workers' music of choice. With round-the-clock country in my head, I was able to discern just what makes modern country so insufferable.

Back in the day, country was a genre full of rebellion, hell-raising, tragedy and longing. The men of country music had a certain air of mystique surrounding them, while the women had the chops and soul to sell their songs. Almost all of the artists had an original voice (and not just of the singing variety) in their music.

Alas, gone are the days the man-in-black's tales or the red-headed stranger's wanderer's laments. We no longer have Loretta Lynn's feminist dealings or Tanya Tucker's tragic lifestyle and song writing.

Substance is sacrificed for style and a place on the Billboard charts.

Like most popular music today, country has become bland and turgid. The guys' baritone voices all blur together, while the singing from the gals is shrill and lifeless. And I've really had my fill of trite love ballads and songs about pick-up trucks or lost dogs.

Leave it up to Canada to produce the greatest country-western troubadour in years of whom no one has heard.

Neko Case has been playing and recording music within a variety of styles since joining the punk group, Maow, in 1994. In 1997, Case released her first solo album and has since honed her country-western-tinged sound, while still having time to participate in her side-project, The Corn Sisters, and record with indie-rock supergroup, The New Pornographers.

Along with members of Calexico, Giant Sand's Howe Gelb and The Band's Garth Hudson, Case has released her strongest and most engrossing album to date. "Fox Confessor Brings the Flood" ebbs and flows with beautiful arrangements that perfectly support the song's narrative but never overpower Case's voice. Her vocals are truly a thing of beauty – simultaneously haunting and enchanting.

Case's songs are rich in poetic lyricisms filled with tragedy, loss and desire. Many tracks also include animal-like allegory. Perhaps the perfect example is found in the first single, "Star Witness."

The song transitions back-and-forth between fond memories of her lover and images of his fatal car accident. In the chorus, Case sings of "tender wolves 'round town tonight;'" during the song's bridge sections, Case multi-tracks her vocals so they sound like a lone wolf howling into the night – anxiously hoping to hear her lost lover's response in the wind.

Along with this wonderful imagery are lyrics that paint the perfect picture of young love and longing:

"Hey pretty baby, get high with me/We can go to my sister's if we say we'll watch the baby/The look on your face yanks my neck on the chain/I would do anything to see you again."

The title track finds Case talking with a "fox confessor" who shows her the destruction caused by humanity on his territory as he foreshadows the death of her civilization; the guitar interplay within the bridge is menacing.

"John Saw That Number" is an uplifting moment within the album. It is a gospel-fueled song in the vein of the music of the Carter family. The canon section with Case's multi-tracked vocals is simply hair-raising.

Plainly put, "Fox Confessor Brings the Flood" is a near masterpiece. If Case were recording at the time of country music's first heyday, we would be listing her name along the likes of Patsy Cline, Hank Williams and Tammy Wynette.

Instead, I, and a small number of cohorts, will hold this album close to our hearts knowing we have discovered the powerful voice of one of our generation's greatest. Miss out on Neko Case at your own risk.

Relaxation time combats end-of-semester stress

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Five more weeks.

After coming back from spring break, many students might be feeling the deluge of last-minute projects and final exams while combating the longing to just have it all be over.

Bradley Matlack, junior in mechanical engineering, said he spent his spring break traveling to a couple of job interviews and hanging out with friends, but adjusting to his normal schedule has been difficult.

"It's been really tough," Matlack said. "You're used to not doing anything."

To keep himself motivated, Matlack said he likes to participate in intramural sports and spend time outdoors.

Even with the occasional diversion, Matlack said he is still waiting expectantly for classes to end.

"I'm definitely ready for it to be over," he said. "But everything is getting busier and busier."

Don Saucier, assistant professor of psychology, said the weeks after spring break indicate the semester is coming to a close, making students anticipate summer.

"They're thinking about the end, what I need to get to the end," Saucier said. "They're in countdown mode."

Because students know classes are coming to an end, Saucier said students might stop regularly attending classes even when new information is being given.

"Attendance isn't real good after the break as before," he said. "But class isn't letting up."

Saucier said students often pack their week of freedom with activities, so when they return from break they often need rest.

"Some of them need a vacation for their vacation," he said.

When students complain of attendance throughout the semester, Saucier said he tries to remind students that coming to class is a conscience choice they have to make.

"It's the degree of personal choice," he said. "You're not in the class because I told you to take it. You're in class because you paid for it."

Saucier said at the beginning of each semester, he has students stand up and state that they are not required to attend class but attend for their own well-being. He said this intrinsic motivation usually propels students to take on responsibility.

"Once they own up to this responsibility, they try to get back to work," he said.

While a number of issues might factor into the end-of-semester slump, Saucier said he would point to a cumulative fatigue during the semester as a main problem for motivation.

"Their sleep patterns are off," he said. "A lot of it has to do with physical shape. There's a marathon, and they're looking for the finish line."

Jason Wilson, psychology intern at Counseling Services, said it is important to realize classes only last for a few more weeks, and this realization might help motivate students to finish the semester strong.

To stay motivated and still have fun, Wilson said students could incorporate social time and study time by working in study groups and encouraging each other to survive the stress.

Wilson said taking time away from a hectic schedule is key to staying sane until summer.

"Make sure you take time out of your schedule to sort of relax and take perspective," Wilson said. "One of the biggest things is to take mini breaks. Take a walk, eat a great meal or take a hot bath."

International Student Center to renovate

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Fee Bond Proposals

Part 2 of 6
A series featuring the project proposals for surplus bonds.

The International Student Center was allocated $50,000 by the student fee bond surplus review committee.

Donna Davis, the center's director and project coordinator, said the funding will go to renovating the center's lounge, multipurpose room and courtyard.

"When I saw the money was available, I had ideas of adding on to the building, but I thought it might be wiser to keep it manageable," Davis said. "So I scaled it down to renovation and updates (of the center)."

About $30,000 will go toward new carpet, furniture and a door from the lounge into the multipurpose room, according to the project proposal.

"With this money, we think we could put in a glass door (in between the lobby and multipurpose room)," Davis said. "The crowd could sit in the lobby and still watch."

Other renovations to the building include acoustic improvements, new poster displays and the construction of a cabinet across the multipurpose room, which were granted allocations of about $20,000.

About $5,000 was also granted for the center's courtyard to turn it into a Japanese garden, according to the proposal.

"It's such a beautiful building, and we're thinking a Japanese garden would be nice," Davis said.

The two original buildings of the center opened in 1977, and an additional wing to the building opened in 1999.

Renovations are scheduled to last about three to six months, according to the proposal.

While the project proposal initially requested $54,080 for the center's renovations, the committee granted it $50,000.

Lydia Peele, bond surplus fund committee member, said the committee asked all presenters about what parts of the projects were least important.

The project was given reduced funding for the installation of a door, chair racks and repairs to a broken planter in the garden, Peele, junior in mathematics education, said.

The committee did leave about $2,500 of requested funding for the project to the center's discretion, Peele said.

"I think we really wanted to make sure that we covered everything that was absolutely necessary to make renovations," she said. "We funded them in the first place to show that K-State students support international students and that they have a place to call home."

Sudha Pisipati, president of International Coordinating Council, said the center offers international coffee hour and speaker's bureau to the student body. Both events take place in the center's multicultural room.

International coffee hour features people who talk about landscape and history in their cultures, and speaker's bureau has people present about their country, Pisipati, graduate student in English, said.

The center also welcomes international students when they come to K-State, Pisipati said.

"The first place that any international student goes to is the International Student Center, and everything there should look very good and comfortable," she said.

Clint Blaes, bond surplus fund committee member, said the renovations will improve the quality of a center that is available to all student organizations.

"Giving them that money will make it a nice place for groups to meet and have programs," Blaes, junior in agricultural communications and journalism, said.

Jim Sherow, associate professor of history, talks about the book "Guns, Germs and Steel" by Jared Diamond Monday evening in Union 207. Sherow and four other professors addressed questions presented by audience members about the book.

Book draws panel's critiques

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The book "Guns, Germs and Steel" by Jared Diamond simplified many issues for readers that might not be so simple, Michael Wesch, assistant professor of anthropology, said.

"It provides too many answers when there should be questions," Wesch said

Wesch participated in a panel discussion of the book with other faculty in Union 207, Monday night.

James Sherow, associate professor of history, Karen DeBres, associate professor of geography, Stephen Long, assistant professor of political science, Lorena Passarelli, assistant professor of biology also participated in the event with Wesch.

The discussion was sponsored by Sigma Iota Rho, the National Honorary Society in International Relations.

The book was chosen for debate on the panel on its merits, said Jennifer Strait, graduate student in political science and president of Sigma Iota Rho.

"Its just a fantastically different way at looking at how the world developed," Strait said.

The basic argument of the book was how Europeans and Eurasians ended up with guns, germs and steel, Wesch said.

"I like big picture books, and this is as good as any big picture book," he said.

Sherow said he had problems with the book's use of other people's research.

"I do have some problems with how he stole from Al Crosby," Sherow said.

Alfred Crosby wrote a book, "Ecological Imperialism," and Diamond drew off of that book, Sherow said.

DeBres said the book's lack of geography was detrimental.

The book lacked any kind of sense of human agency, Long said.

He used the example of the Ming Dynasty of China, which had a large fleet of ships that were bigger than those later developed in Europe.

The ships made the voyage to the tip of Africa, when the Emperor of China ordered their destruction, Long said.

"This is before Europe even got that far," Long said.

The difference in development between Europe and China was the lack of other resources in developing ships and other things, Long said.

Europe had many countries, which allowed explorers to go from country to country until they found sponsors, while China had the Emperor, who's final word was law, Long said.

Diamond led people to believe that unification was bad, while fragmentation was good, based on these findings, Long said.

Another major problem with the book was that it was too broad, DeBres said.

"Diamond is trying to represent half a dozen different fields, and you can't do that," she said.

Another problem with the book was the perception it left that Europeans rose to power due to their intelligence, among other uncontrollable factors, Wesch said.

This led some readers to rationalize their position in society and the conditions in some other countries.

"People who read this are the type of people who want to justify their superiority," he said.

Debate to address same-sex rights

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anyone interested in the civil rights of same-sex couples can attend a debate at 7 p.m. Wednesday in the Alumni Center banquet room.

The debate is part of the Dorothy Thompson Lecture Series, which was named after the first authority of action director at K-State, said Jane Rowlett, director of the office of academic services and associate professor.

"Dorothy Thompson believed in human and civil rights, and certainly this is a relevant issue," Rowlett said. "She believed in fairness for everyone."

The panel for the debate includes Pedro Irigonegaray, a civil rights attorney advocating the civil rights of same-sex couples, and Joel Oster, senior legal counsel for the Alliance Defense Fund who holds an opposing view. Bill Rich, associate dean of academic affairs and professor of law at Washburn Law School, will serve as moderator.

Rowlett said anyone who attends should come with an open mind.

"People should listen to both views that are portrayed," she said. "Keep in mind that this isn't just about same-sex marriages, it's about civil rights and whether or not they should be afforded to same-sex couples."

Shiloh Dutton, junior in social studies education, serves as the student attorney general and a member of the series planning committee. He said students should attend this lecture to gain knowledge about the constitutional laws concerning same-sex couples.

"The focus will be more over the legal issues and less over the moral issues," he said.

Susana Valdovinos, associate director of the Office of Affirmative Action, said the topics that will be covered go beyond same-sex marriage issues.

"The issues of civil rights in the context of same-sex relationships are not limited to marriage, but include adoptions, rites of succession and medical decisions as well," she said.

Dutton said the committee is looking forward to a positive response to the debate regardless of opinion.

"This will be very informative," he said. "Both men are very familiar with the topic and know what they're talking about."

Alorica to create 600 jobs

Manhattan-area job market to increase after call center triples staff for new client Cingular

By Lacey Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 600 new employees will be added to a customer service management provider in Manhattan.

Alorica Inc., which has a site in Manhattan, will add additional employees in the next six months due to its signing with Cingular Wireless.

With more than 250 currently on staff, Martin Grygar, Manhattan's site director, said the company plans to hire about 100 new employees by April 10, about 250 more by the middle of May and about an additional 250 by the middle of June.

Grygar said the company hopes to complete expansion of its staff by July.

"We're more than tripling our staff," Grygar said. "It's good news for the community."

To expedite the hiring process, Alorica is offering career empowerment events to provide information, applications and on-site interviews for interested applicants.

"In many cases, they'll know when they leave if they have a job," Grygar said.

The first of several of these events will be from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. today at Alorica's Manhattan site, 5970 Skyes Blvd. Alorica is offering paid training and benefits to new employees.

Grygar said he was excited about the expansion and the assistance it would offer to those job-searching locally and about the opportunity to bring service to a client like Cingular.

"We want to show Cingular we can do this and do it well," he said.

After Alorica signed a three-year contract with Cingular, Nicole Farugia, corporate marketing communications specialist at Alorica, said the company is excited about expanding in Manhattan.

"We find there's a very increasing quality in Manhattan that's atypical of a call center," she said. "It's a great opportunity for us to grow with Cingular."

Farugia said she thought the company has enjoyed having a call center in Manhattan because of the quality of agents employed in the area.

"The agents are really unique individuals," she said. "They put personal pride into what the do."

Kelsey Jumper, Alorica's Kansas human resources manager, said having a client like Cingular would allow Alorica to diversify its call center while making an impact in the Manhattan community's job market.

"It allows up to make a bigger footprint in the Manhattan area," Jumper said. "It allows us to get our name into the Manhattan community."

As a company that caters as a third-party provider to a variety of companies, Jumper said he hoped the addition of new employees in Manhattan would help educate people about Alorica's services.

"We're trying to shape the culture to help people know what Alorica's about," he said. "This is a great opportunity for us to show what we do."

Former Westar CEO sentenced to 18 years for looting millions

By David Twiddy
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA – A federal judge on Monday sentenced former Westar Energy Inc. CEO David Wittig to 18 years in prison for looting millions from the Kansas utility.

U.S. District Judge Julie Robinson sentenced Wittig's co-defendant, Douglas Lake, the former executive vice president of Westar, to 15 years in prison. Wittig and Lake also were ordered to pay fines of $5 million each, in addition to millions of dollars in restitution.

Attorneys for both men said they intend to appeal.

The sentences brought to a close legal proceedings that began shortly after Wittig, Westar's former president, chairman and chief executive, and Lake left the company in late 2002 amid concerns that they had used a barrage of schemes to inflate their pay and benefits and hide them from the company's board of directors and shareholders.

An initial three-month trial ended in a hung jury in late 2004, but jurors in a second trial on Sept. 12 found the two men guilty of conspiracy, wire fraud, money laundering and circumventing internal controls during their tenures at Topeka-based Westar, the largest electric utility in Kansas.

Wittig, 50, was convicted of 39 counts; Lake, 55, was convicted of 30 counts and acquitted of nine.

During sentencing, Robinson drew parallels to the Enron scandal, but said she thought Wittig and Lake's behavior may have been worse.

"The defendants' greed was unbridled and seemingly limitless," she said. "The defendants weren't trying to keep an unhealthy company afloat. They were trying to destroy a healthy company and for what reason? Their own compensation."

Robinson refused bond for both men pending appeal, saying she didn't think defense attorneys had raised strong arguments for overturning their convictions. She also said the men had shown "disrespect" for the court by not adequately informing prosecutors and federal probation officers about their finances.

Wittig has been in federal prison in Leavenworth since January when Robinson revoked his bond for violating terms of his release on an earlier, separate bank fraud conviction. He is to be sentenced on that conviction April 24.

The U.S. Probation Office had recommended life in prison for both men, but attorneys for both defendants argued their clients' crimes were not serious enough to warrant that sentence.

Three disciplined for inmate death

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – There is "no acceptable explanation" for the recent death of an inmate at the Wichita Work Release Facility, Kansas Department of Corrections Secretary Roger Werholtz said.

Alexis McCullough, 41, died March 26 after seeking help for hours because of shortness of breath and chest pain, witnesses said. McCullough, serving a five- to 20-year sentence for arson and robbery convictions in Seward County, died at a Wichita hospital.

In response to the death, two supervisors at the Wichita facility face disciplinary action and a nurse who was on duty at the time was barred from providing care in the state's correctional buildings.

In a statement issued Friday, Werholtz apologized to McCullough's family "for the role some of our staff may have played in the failure to provide timely access to appropriate medical care. There is no acceptable explanation for what occurred."

The warden of the Wichita facility, Emmalee Conover, has proposed the first-shift lieutenant be fired and the second-shift master sergeant be demoted and receive a 10-day suspension without pay, the corrections department said.

The nurse, who worked for the department's health care contract provider, Correct Care Solutions, was fired Friday, said Patrick Cummiskey, the company's executive vice president.

The names of the two staff members and the nurse were not released.

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation is investigating.

The Department of Corrections said the nurse saw McCullough on the morning of March 26, a Sunday. The lieutenant working as a shift supervisor from 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. received "numerous reports of Mr. McCullough's physical condition." The master sergeant working as shift supervisor from 2 to 10 p.m. also was told of McCullough's condition.

Thunderstorms, tornadoes kill at least 27 in South, Midwest

By Rose French
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BRADFORD, Tenn. - Larry Taylor, who owns the only funeral home in this small town, plans to hold services later this week for four family members who were ripped from their home by a tornado.

Despite the loss, Taylor plans to help dress and prepare the bodies of his son and daughter-in-law and the couple's two young sons.

"I have to," he said. "It's peace of mind. It's my boy."

The bodies of Brad and Tanya Taylor, and their two sons, ages 5 and 3, were found 800 yards from their house after a vicious series of tornadoes carved a zigzagging path of destruction Sunday across eight states in the nation's midsection. At least 27 people were killed and thousands of buildings wrecked.

The family will be buried in two separate caskets, with each child alongside one of his parents.

"It basically took my life away. I don't really care if I see daylight tomorrow," Taylor said through tears. "I'd give everything I had for that not to have happened. Those little boys were my life."

The worst damage occurred along a 25-mile swath of rural western Tennessee, where 23 of the deaths occurred and state troopers using dogs searched for more victims amid the rubble of brick buildings and toppled trailers.

"Most of the houses, you can't count. They're just gone," said Roy Childress, who was part of a church relief crew that was delivering food and water to survivors Monday.

The dead included an infant and the grandparents who had been babysitting him.

Severe storms also struck parts of Iowa, Kentucky, Arkansas, Missouri, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana. Strong winds were blamed for at least three deaths in Missouri. A clothing store collapsed in southern Illinois, killing one man.

In Arkansas, Logan Hawley tried to escape by driving with a group of other people to a tornado shelter.

"We couldn't see anything," Hawley said. "It was just brown in front of us." The car crashed at an intersection, so the six people inside had no choice but to sit terrified as the tornado passed.

"I just closed by eyes and hoped it was a dream," he said.

The brunt of the storms, some packing softball-sized hail, blasted an area between the small town of Newbern, about 80 miles northeast of Memphis, to Bradford. Twenty-three people were killed, including an infant and the grandparents who had been babysitting him. A family of four was also killed.

Gov. Phil Bredesen said more than 1,000 buildings were seriously damaged or destroyed and about 75 people injured, 17 of them critically. He asked President Bush to declare Dyer and Gibson counties federal disaster areas.

"Our first priority is helping those impacted to get back on their feet quickly and to bring back a sense of normalcy at a time when they need it most," said Bredesen, who planned to visit the area Tuesday.

The Tennessee Valley Authority estimated that more than 18,000 customers in Tennessee and Kentucky were without power Monday.

The storms developed after a cold front approaching from the West slammed into a mass of warm, humid air, said Memphis meteorologist Jody Aaron. A tornado in Dyer County apparently had winds of 158 to 206 mph, making it an F3 on the Fujita scale used by the National Weather service to rate tornadoes.

The weather service's Storm Prediction Center in Norman, Okla., said it had preliminary reports of 63 tornadoes.

About a half-dozen tornadoes struck Arkansas and one destroyed nearly half the town of Marmaduke, according to a fire department official. Authorities cordoned off the town after a gas line ruptured, and three people remained unaccounted for Monday.

"Almost every single structure in Marmaduke has minor to moderate damage, but almost 50 percent of it is totally destroyed," acting fire commander Chris Franks said. Much of the town also was damaged by a tornado in 1997.

Brick shells were all that remained of some houses, while corrugated metal used as roofing was draped around several trees. The storm rolled railroad cars onto their sides, several feet away from the nearest track.

In downtown Indianapolis, tornado-force winds shattered dozens of windows in an high-rise office building.

The storm hit just after thousands of people had left a free outdoor concert by John Mellencamp held as part of the NCAA men's Final Four basketball tournament.

Airlines charging for comfort items

By Leslie Miller
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Ask for a pillow and blanket to help get through a long flight and you may be out of luck. Or you may be able to buy a "comfort package" from Air Canada for $2.

Like to check your luggage curbside? That could cost up to $3 a bag.

Airlines are starting to charge for many services that once were free – such as assigned seating, paper tickets and blankets.

Air travelers who don't fly often may be in for some unpleasant surprises when they reach the airport this summer.

"They're going to be confused, and they're going to be somewhat upset," said Kevin Mitchell, president of the Business Travelers Coalition. "Is it going to stop them from flying? No."

Intense competition from low-fare airlines along with high jet-fuel prices have led many established carriers to cut back or charge passengers for amenities.

Many airlines no longer serve meals on flights, instead charging for snack boxes and sandwiches.

Sharon Ansara, a government supervisor from El Paso, Texas, flew an American Airlines flight from Dallas to Washington Monday morning.

"We didn't even get peanuts," she said after the 2.5-hour flight. "They offered us a snack pack for $4. It stinks."

American spokesman Tim Wagner said that passengers have made it clear that their first priority in buying an airline ticket is price. The company offers a la carte services – such as snack packs – for those willing to pay for them.

Air Canada, which recently emerged from bankruptcy, decided against eliminating pillows and blankets, as some airlines have done. Instead, the airline decided to give passengers the choice of buying an inflatable pillow and a light fleece blanket for $2, according to spokeswoman Isabelle Arthur.

There are limits to what passengers will pay for.

American Eagle, which flies commuter flights for American, experimented in January with charging for soft drinks.

"They evaluated customer response," Wagner said. "The customer response was, 'No, we don't want to pay $1 for a soft drink.'" The test ended, he said.

Some services once taken for granted are now seen as amenities as the burden of ticketing now falls on the passenger with a home computer instead of airline employees.

Talking to an airline reservation agent instead of booking a ticket on the Internet will add $5 or $10 to the price of a ticket. A paper ticket instead of a computer-generated one will cost $20 or $30 for a domestic flight.

Passengers are also finding that the limits on baggage size and weight are lower, and that airlines enforce them. For most airlines, passengers are charged at least $25 for a bag that weighs more than 50 pounds. A third checked bag will cost $80 on many airlines.

Some airlines are now even charging to reserve seats with extra legroom.

United Airlines charges $24-$99 to sit in the Economy Plus section, which has five extra inches of leg room.

Some international carriers also charge for aisle or bulkhead seats. Northwest Airlines in March began charging $15 for exit rows some forward aisle seats.

Carol Mundt, a retiree who lives in the Washington area, travels frequently for visits and vacations. She heard about Northwest's new seat assignment charges.

"I was appalled that they would charge me for my aisle seat," she said while waiting to pick up a friend at Washington's Reagan National Airport.

Northwest spokesman Kurt Ebenhoch said Northwest has to be able to compete against low-cost airlines like Southwest, which doesn't assign seats at all.

Southwest, which carried more people in the U.S. than any other airline, doesn't charge for a la carte services, with the exception of overweight and oversize bags.

A soft drink, a bag of pretzels and a changed ticket don't cost extra, said Southwest spokesman Ed Stewart.

But Southwest doesn't offer services such as assigned seating or keeping an eye on an unaccompanied child.

Continental Airlines is one of the few that still offers hot meals on domestic flights.

wives," Graber said. "This is the first year that other groups like the International Coordinating Council sponsored it."

Graber said she and her coworkers built on what was done in the past and were more than satisfied with the end result.

"I think it went extremely well," Graber said. "Our goal was to have it be fun for the whole family and to be a mix of all countries. We would always like to have a little more culture represented, but I feel as though a sufficient amount was shown.

"We tried to focus a little more on the United States this year as well, and to focus on not only the daily apparel of different countries but on special occasion and formal wear as well."

Graber said she thinks all the models worked together very well, and it was special because all are from different parts of the world.

People of all ages attended the show, including 18-year-old Manhattan resident Allison Wilcox.

"This is the first year I have ever attended the show," Wilcox said. "I really enjoyed it, especially the line dancing and seeing all the different outfits. It was definitely different than I expected."

Art exhibit of historic chairs shows design evolution, history

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Four legs and a seat. It's just a chair.

But to some, it's more than that. Some call it a piece of art.

While walking around a small, low-lighted room, Katie Geckles, junior in interior design, stops in front of a low-seated, curved, green chair.

"I think that one's cool," Geckles said. "I think it looks the most comfortable because it surrounds you."

Upon closer inspection, the 1957 egg lounge chair was designed by Arne Jacobsen, well-known for his architectural and interior design of the Scandinavian Airlines System Air Terminal and Royal Hotel in Copenhagen – the purpose for the chair's design.

"Behind Design: Chairs As Icons of Modernism" is an exhibit of design by chairs and pieces of work purchased by K-State after a construction boom at the university 12 years after World War II.

The exhibit will be open from 1:30 to 4:30 p.m. Tuesdays and Wednesdays and by appointment through May 17 in the Apparel, Textiles and Interior Design Gallery in Justin 328. The exhibit is free and open to the public.

To add depth to pieces, a number of chairs are highlighted by colorful commercial textiles in the background, most designed by 20th century designer Jack Lenor Larsen.

A docent of the exhibit, Geckles said she has previously perched on the exhibit's slat or platform bench by designer George Nelson while waiting for class, but seeing it in an exhibit makes her look at the piece in a new way.

"You pay more attention to the shape and the structure of the form," she said. "It makes you look twice."

Barbara Anderson, assistant professor of apparel, textiles and interior design, said many of the pieces in the exhibit are from Justin Hall and the K-State Student Union, and allow people to see design and history come together.

"You get a little of modernist history, a little snippet of K-State history," she said.

Anderson said the exhibit also offers a range of chairs with different designs, methods and techniques.

"When they were being designed, they were cutting-edge chairs," Anderson said. "We thought we needed to bring

Cabinet positions open for applicants

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Applications for Student Governing Association cabinet positions are due by 4 p.m. April 14 in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Incoming Student Body President Lucas Maddy and Vice President Katie Maddy are accepting applications for 12 cabinet positions.

The positions are chief of staff, academic quality coordinator, College Council coordinator, Governmental relations director, graduate student liaison, international affairs director, K-State Manhattan-Salina relations liaison, multicultural affairs director, off-campus housing director, public relations director, residence hall liaison and technology coordinator.

Applications are also being accepted for legislative branch positions and university committee at-large positions.

Grant Groene, outgoing student body vice president, said available cabinet positions are determined each year by the student body president.

The time commitments for the positions are about one hour a week, said Michael Burns, current and outgoing student body president.

"Some of them are a little more labor intensive than others," Burns said.

Lucas Maddy said no previous experience with student government is needed to apply.

"There are some positions where experience is beneficial, but there are no requirements for experience," he said.

Lucas Maddy said all applicants will be interviewed, but no date has been set. The date of interviews will depend on how many applications are received, he said.

Lucas Maddy said he encourages students to apply to use their talents to help SGA and the university.

"These are pretty important because this is the work that will get done and allow administration to pursue goals and set our sights ahead," he said.

K-State Police receives two new cars, replaces older vehicles

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two 2006 Dodge Chargers are being outfitted for use by K-State Police.

Capt. Troy Lane, support commander for campus police, said the old vehicles, which the new vehicles are replacing, will be auctioned off through Purple Wave Auction Inc., 701 Enoch Lane.

Purple Wave Auction Company deals with live and Internet bidding on liquidated, consignment and Kansas Department of Transportation items.

Listing the cars on Purple Wave Action Company's Web site will allow a quicker sale of them, Lane said.

One of the older vehicles had 150,000 miles on the odometer and had gone through three transmissions, Lane said.

"It was getting to the point where the maintenance costs exceeded the costs of a new vehicle," Lane said.

However, Gov. Kathleen Sebelius placed spending restrictions on state agencies, and the police department was unable to purchase new vehicles until now, Lane said.

"We have four cars total," he said.

Campus police received the new cars at the end of March, said Capt. Richard Herrman, patrol commander for campus police.

It will take at least a couple of weeks to get the new cars outfitted with light bars, radio units and decals, Herrman said.

One car is being outfitted, and the other has been fitted with decals, Herrman said.

When the car being outfitted returns from the shop, it will be fitted with decals, and the other will be sent to have the equipment put in place.

The light bars and radio units will be transferred from the older vehicles to the new ones, Lane said.

"Then we'll hit the street with them," Herrman said.

The constant use of the vehicles puts significant wear and tear on them, and the budget constraints only allowed for the purchase of two new cars.

"This has kind of forced us to buy a couple cars at a time," Lane said.

Blood drive not on pace to meet goal due to poor turnout

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The blood drive is in its first two days, and early results are less than the goal.

Kristi Reif, donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross, said the blood drive finished 66 pints under its goal for Monday. The organization had hoped to get 175 pints on Monday.

Reif said she hopes the drive picks up and makes its goal.

"It's been really slow," she said. "We need to make up and make goal for the rest of the week."

The slow response, Reif said, was puzzling to her.

"A ton of students usually donate, and we usually exceed our goal," she said. "I don't know what's going on."

Other than the number of pints collected, Reif said she has other goals for the blood drive.

"We try to get first-time donors to come in," she said. "It's a fun blood drive, and it turns into a social event. It's a good way for first-time donors to come and try to give blood."

One of the main fears of first-time donors is the needle through which they draw the blood, Reif said.

"The needle is the one thing that scares people," she said. "The actual donation time usually takes five to 10 minutes. Once the needle's in, the donor doesn't really feel it."

Megan Deppner, freshman in English, was one of the donors Tuesday. She said although she dislikes the needle, she still gets rewards from giving blood.

"Knowing that I helped people is very rewarding," she said.

Deppner said the first time is scary, but she had some advice for first-time donors.

"The first time I was terrified," she said. "It's not a bad experience, first-time donors should just go in with an open mind."

Deppner said the first time she gave, she had moral support.

"My friends asked me to go with them," she said. "I probably wouldn't have gone had they not asked me."

Brian Sandon, senior in mechanical engineering, said he agreed with Deppner.

"The first time, go with a friend," he said.

Sandon said he has given blood 10 times. He began giving blood with his grandfather.

"My grandfather has given 18 or 19 gallons of blood," he said. "I started doing it because he does it."

Sandon said there was another reward for giving blood.

"I got out of class when I gave in high school," he said.

DeLay resigns

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Succumbing to scandal, former Majority Leader Tom DeLay said Tuesday he is resigning from Congress in the face of a tough re-election race, closing out a career that blended unflinching conservatism with a bare-knuckled political style. "I have no fear whatsoever about any investigation into me or my personal or professional activities," DeLay said in a statement to constituents.

Saddam accused of genocide

BAGHDAD, Iraq — The Iraq tribunal announced new criminal charges against Saddam Hussein and six others Tuesday, accusing them of genocide and crimes against humanity stemming from a 1980s crackdown against Kurds. The move, tantamount to an indictment under the Iraqi legal system, paves the way for a second trial of the ousted ruler.

Manhattan approves $5.5 million airport improvement project

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Manhattan City Commission approved an agreement with the federal government that will add more space for aircraft to the Manhattan Regional Airport at its meeting Tuesday night.

The estimated $5.5 million project will be paid for by the Department of Defense, according to the agreement. It will construct a joint-use airport ramp, as well as supplemental structures on 21 acres of airport land.

The land will be leased for 50 years at no cost.

David Carté, project manager for the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, said the project will allow forces based in Fort Riley to deploy quickly to anywhere in the world. But when not in use, other planes can park there.

"Ninety percent of the time we're probably not going to be out there," Carté said.

The city will be responsible for ramp fire protection as well as lighting and maintenance.

The agreement requires the city to give the government exclusive use of the property whenever needed, as long as sufficient notice is given. The agreement stated that four hours would be necessary for a "Quick Reaction Force" mission, while 72 hours would be required for a "Unit of Action training deployment/redeployment" mission.

"I just think it's a very significant development, and the federal funding for this expansion of our ramp is indicative of the role of Fort Riley and the strengthening of that role," Commissioner Bruce Snead said.

The commission also agreed to lease some broken natural gas-compressing equipment to K-State's Natural Gas Machinery Laboratory. Diane Stoddard, deputy city manager, said the equipment was purchased years ago to fuel city vehicles that could use the gas as well as gasoline.

Stoddard said the equipment stopped working several years ago, and the city chose to fuel the vehicles with gasoline instead of paying an estimated $20,000 to repair the equipment.

The laboratory will have to move the equipment and repair it, all at its own expense.

Hypnotist entertains students

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Anyone wishing to meet versions of Steve Erwin, Blake Sheldon, or Mrs. Doubtfire could have Tuesday night, when hypnotist and veterinarian Al Snyder went on stage in front of about 200 people, bringing with him 24 volunteers from the audience, ready to be hypnotized.

Snyder's presentation was a part of the College of Agriculture's Ag Fest.

"I can't control their minds, I can only give them suggestions," Snyder said. "It's similar to sleepwalking, and I am the dream master. I simply create the backdrop."

Snyder said being hypnotized is equal to three to four hours of sleep, and the participants would wake up refreshed and rejuvenated.

To begin, he had them stand up, dimmed the lights, put on music, and held up a flashing light. The participants then counted backwards from 10, and as they closed their eyes they began to sway back and forth.

Snyder began their hypnosis by telling them the temperature was becoming warmer. The higher he said the temperature was going, the volunteers began to sweat, wiping their brows, and fanning themselves. The reverse was true when he said the temperature dropped. They became very cold, and even cuddled with other volunteers to keep warm.

Snyder led his participants in a variety of activities to entertain the audience.

Snyder led four individuals to believe they were Irish and dancing a jig, along with a student who thought he was Mrs. Doubtfire. This student was very upset because his "dress was not modest enough to dance."

Crocodile Hunter Steve Erwin and country singer Blake Sheldon also made appearances at the show. Two students believed they were the respective celebrities, singing and warning the audience to leave crocodile eggs alone.

Snyder then brought them back to reality, but told Casey Bieroth, junior in agricultural business, that after leaving the stage, he would believe the roll of toilet paper handed to him was money, and he was the richest man alive.

"I'm not sure how I got this money," Bieroth said afterwards. "All I know is I woke up and I was rich. I'm going to go to Aggieville and buy drinks with it."

Bieroth said he had been hypnotized before and knew what to expect, but it felt like he was only out for 20 minutes, not the hour-and-a-half that it actually was.

Members of the audience had much to say about the performance.

"I've been hypnotized in the past, and it was a lot of fun to watch other people go through it," Halley Beekley, junior in agricultural communications. "It was hilarious to watch, especially Steve Erwin and Blake Sheldon."

House still debating school finance plan

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After rejecting three proposed bills, the Kansas legislature is still debating school finance.

The first of these bills proposed to increase school funding by $633 million over a three-year period and was passed by the Kansas House of Representatives on March 26 with a 64-61 vote.

"I thought we had a good plan," Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said. "It would help all districts – large, medium and small – it was good for the Manhattan district."

This bill was defeated in the Kansas Senate shortly after, never gaining more than 14 votes.

Two other bills were also discussed in the Senate last week. The first was proposed by Senate leaders and called for an increase of $660 million over three years. This bill was defeated 16-24.

Sen. Jim Barnett, R-Emporia, proposed the third bill, which provides for a funding increase of $480.4 million during a four-year period. The Barnett Bill received 20 votes, with 21 needed to pass legislation.

Kansas' Congress dismissed Friday and will resume on April 26. An extra session to discuss the Senate and Barnett finance plans is possible.

11-day special session in 2005 cost the state $500,000.

"Since the final gavel hasn't fallen, anything could come back," Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said.

The debate over school finance was sparked by a lawsuit filed against the state by Salina, Kan. and Dodge City, Kan., claiming the state was not providing adequate education funding, and it hadn't done so for a long time, Reitz said.

Nine months after the suit was filed, the Kansas Supreme Court declared that public education funding in Kansas lacked about $800 million. The court allowed the state to increase by $260 million at first, but expect another increase of $500 million this year, he said.

The main goal of the lawsuit was to provide all Kansas children with equal educational opportunities, Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, said.

OPINION

TO THE POINT

Qualified students should apply for cabinet

Applications for Student Governing Association cabinet positions are due April 14.

There are 12 cabinet positions available for Incoming Student Body President and Vice President Lucas and Katie Maddy, respectively.

Positions also are available for legislative branch positions and university committee at-large positions.

Students who are interestcd in the leadership positions should apply. There is no requirement for previous experience in student government to apply.

Time commitments for cabinet positions are only about one hour a week.

Students often complain about different aspects of K-State and the things they wish were different. Serving in these leadership roles would allow students to make the changes they want to see at K-State.

Also, students in cabinet positions will serve the vital role of helping the incoming student body president and vice president.

Those who think they are qualified to serve in a leadership role with the SGA presidential cabinet should take the initiative and apply.

After all, there is no better way to try to improve something than to get involved and take action. Turn in an application before it's too late.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Afghan persecution

U.S. foreign policy must protect religious liberty

KODY COOPER

"I believe in the Holy Spirit. I believe in Jesus Christ, and I am a Christian. If I must die, I will die."

So said Afghani convert to Christianity, Abdul Rahman, 41. Rahman was arrested in February when Afghan authorities discovered he possessed a Bible. In Afghanistan, professing Christ equates to apostasy, a capital crime deserving of execution.

An Afghani judge offered to release him only if he would recant this blasphemy. Rahman refused. Because he refused to repent, Rahman's defense argued that he was mentally unfit to stand trial.

To most Afghanis, anyone who would refuse to renounce Jesus in the face of beheading is certifiably insane. Yet, this ploy wasn't convincing to many hardline clerics who balked at letting Rahman walk.

Rahman's infamous imprisonment and steadfast faith have headlined newsreels worldwide.

From the Afghan district of Muhammad-land, so emanates the story that causes the residents of the American district of Jesus-land to question their support for the foreign policy of their Christian president, George W. Bush.

President Bush's foreign policy, variously termed by the punditry, amounts to fighting Islamofascism by promoting democracy abroad. The costs are great.

Fertilizing the grass and "democracy" in Afghanistan is American blood and treasure. Three-hundred American boys and girls have died since the 2001 toppling of the brutally theocratic Taliban, and $70 billion of American taxpayer treasure sustains the venture.

Americans sacrificed all this blood and treasure in part that Afghanis might live freely. Yet, the average American Jesus-lander questions how "free" Afghanis actually are.

"Freedom" in Afghanistan does not encompass religious liberty, as Rahman knows all to well. This is not a country governed by a Western-style constitution, but the Sharia, or Islamic law.

All schools of Islamic jurisprudence agree that the Sharia mandates execution for apostates.

For example, when leading Afghani "moderate" cleric Abdul Raoulf was asked what fate should befall the Christ-following Rahman, Raoulf's exclaimed response was, "Cut off his head!"

And why not? After all, the Prophet Muhammad himself (peace be upon him) said: "If any Muslim changes his religion, kill him." (Pause for metacommentary).

Funny, I don't recall Jesus commanding John to kill Peter for his apostasy of denying the Master three times. Neither did Jesus command his followers to kill the great apostate, Judas.

In contrast to the Prophet Muhammad, Jesus taught his disciples, "He who lives by the sword, dies by the sword." Clearly Jesus and Muhammad do not serve the same god. (End pause).

So, here's what we're faced with. Basically, a Christian convert in Afghanistan has about as much chance of survival as a Marquette Golden Eagle in Bramlage Coliseum.

But whereas, Jesus didn't intervene to stop the Eagles' slaughter at the hands of the Cats, Jesus has saved Rahman from slaughter at the hands of the Islamists. We thank him in both regards.

Under pressure from the West, Rahman was released just days ago, infuriating the Afghan clerics. Facing almost certain death at the hands of the Afghan mob, Rahman escaped to exile in Italy.

Yet, this remedy does not solve the underlying issue. Why should Christians support a foreign policy described as "spreading liberty" if that liberty does not encompass religious freedom for followers of Christ?

Why should American boys and girls fight and die to replace the Taliban with Islamists that kill Christians?

This brand of "democracy" is not what Americans bargained for. President Bush must insist that as long as America is around, the policy of killing Christ's followers cannot stand.

Morals should not be forced upon others

KELSEY CHILDRESS

With the recent surge of pharmacists in the United States who have refused to sell their customers the morning-after pill, I have decided to take matters into my own hands and refuse to do certain tasks that are against my own personal moral codes.

There are many things I have to do as part of my job, but today I have decided that will stop right now. If the pharmacists have the right to refuse the sale of a pill, which many women only use as a last resort, then I certainly have the right to refuse my services to certain members of the community with whose lifestyles I do not agree.

Let's start with smoking cigarettes. I've been in all-out screaming fights with boyfriends at parties in front of big groups of people because they've smoked or chewed tobacco in my presence.

This is a disgusting habit. I hate the smell of it, and the smoke hurts my lungs. In addition, lung cancer is one of the leading causes of death in adults today.

In my job as a cashier, I am required to give cigarettes and tobacco to customers who request it for purchase. I don't agree with smoking; I hate it, so I will refuse to sell them tobacco. I will refer them to another cashier, which will require them to get into another check-out line and have their order rang up again.

When it comes to my morals being compromised, it doesn't matter the inconvenience it will cause my customers who have been waiting patiently in line to make a purchase at the establishment which supplies my paycheck.

I have a moral standard to uphold, which includes battling for a world without smoking.

It is their choice to smoke, just like it is the woman's choice to take a pill that isn't an abortion pill, but rather a way to reduce the risk of impregnation (If one is already pregnant, then the morning-after pill will not hurt the fetus or embryo).

Smoking isn't the only thing that really bothers me.

I also have decided to refuse selling junk food to the obese.

They don't need any more 'bad' foods, so prohibiting the opportunity to buy foods high in calories and saturated fats will only be a benefit.

It is their choice to eat foods that are unhealthy, but since I don't agree with it, then I obviously have the right to refuse to sell these items to the overweight. Only if they come through my line bearing some granola bars and a fruit basket, will their transaction be a smooth one.

I think everyone's jobs should be shaped accordingly to their personal beliefs; don't you?

It really makes sense to force your moral standards onto others, especially in their time of need (hence the term 'morning-after'). It makes mandating what others do in their free time so much easier.

This column is completely satirical. I have not, and never will, refuse to sell tobacco or junk food to anyone, even though cringing on my part may occur.

Salina instructor simulates GlobalFlyer's record flight

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Steve Fossett began an attempt to set the longest nonstop flight distance record, the Virgin Atlantic GlobalFlyer "Ultimate Flight," one pilot at K-State-Salina mirrored the trip through a flight simulator.

Brad Amstutz, senior flight instructor at K-State-Salina, agreed to attempt the simulated flight, which used a Microsoft flight simulator program. The simulation process began at about 2:30 a.m. on March 14 and ended after approximately four days and three nights.

Amstutz said staying awake was a challenge from the beginning.

"I started off behind on sleep, because I didn't get the required eight hours the night before," he said.

The purpose of the simulated flight was for seven graduate students in psychology from the Manhattan campus to study Amstutz's cognitive and perceptual skills, Kim Raddatz, graduate student in psychology, said. Raddatz was one of the participants in the study.

"We wanted to see how Brad's skills were affected by sleep deprivation," she said.

Amstutz said he was given a battery of tests every four hours.

"There were 12 kinds of tests monitoring my cognitive skills, emotional state, state of psychosis, and my ability to focus on objects on the screen," he said.

Raddatz said Amstutz performed better than she had anticipated.

"I was impressed with (Amstutz's) ability to complete the tasks, even after 50 or 60 hours," she said.

This is the second year Amstutz has paralleled the flight of the GlobalFlyer. He said though the task was nearly the same, the experiences each year differed greatly.

"I can't compare the two experiences," Amstutz said. "Last year was more media-focused, so I got to use a lot of the latest technology for a showcase in a magazine. This year was more about the scientific approach and psychological tests, and seeing how my cognitive skills degraded."

Peter Elgin, graduate student in psychology, helped to develop the tests given to Amstutz.

"It really opened my eyes to see how sleep deprivation can really affect pilot performance," he said. "Not to mention, it was really neat that it was done in conjunction with what Steve Fossett was doing."

Raddatz and Elgin both said they enjoyed the opportunity to help develop and execute these experiments.

"It's great to do something in real time, in real life," Raddatz said. "There are a lot of implications to actual issues in aviation, like sleep deprivation and decision-making. It's not often you can get a volunteer to do something like this."

TO THE EDITOR

Time spent with K-State fans at the WNIT was enjoyable

Editor,

I wanted to write to everyone at K-State and tell them of my visit to your campus.

I'm a Western Kentucky University Lady Topper basketball fan. We drove for more than 10 hours to see the basketball game between K-State and WKU.

When we arrived at the arena, we were welcomed by everyone in a manner I would have expected in the Old South. Everyone was extremely friendly. One K-State fan approached us, welcomed us, told us her seat number and said if we had any questions or needed any help to just let her know. Another man came up and said he was hoping "Big Red" would be there for the game.

The K-State students were polite, and treated us and our players with a respect that is not always the norm in a lot of places these days. When we were going to find a seat we were told that a few rows were reserved behind the Lady Topper bench.

Even Willie the Wildcat came by and was very friendly.

After the game, a number of fans came up to us and shook our hands and told us what a wonderful team we had. I met the parents of number 40 (JoAnn Hamlin) at the motel where we were staying, and again, was very impressed with their friendliness.

I was getting gas before leaving town – still wearing a WKU cap – and the person at the store mentioned the game and how well our team played, and what a great game it was.

If anyone from K-State ever visits WKU, I would hope they are treated half as nice as we were.

Thanks to everyone at K-State for (almost) a perfect visit – if only your players had been a little nicer and let us win.

Marijuana penalties unfair

Editor,

Your article on the two K-State undergraduate students charged with marijuana misdemeanors and felonies serves as a reminder that, in Kansas, possession of any amount of marijuana is punishable by up to one year in jail and a fine of $2,500. A second conviction increases the penalty to 10-42 months and a fine of $100,000. Cultivation of five plants is a felony. Sale of any amount is a felony.

Compared to other felonies – aggravated assault, arson, burglary, murder and rape – there is something counter-intuitive about marijuana being included in the same category.

Considering the culture of alcohol consumption at K-State, it would be hypocritical for us to take a moral or legal position against a smaller portion of the community who prefer the marijuana high.

My mother was an active member of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. I remember when restaurants in Kansas could not serve liquor, and when people went to other states to gamble. But Kansans have made their peace with such vices, leaving it up to each individual to determine his or her behavior.

Maybe it is time for Kansas legislators to rethink laws regarding private marijuana use. Meanwhile, if a young person makes a mistake with marijuana, perhaps there can be protective measures to handle the matter locally, with fines, community service and health education, not leaving their fate to be decided in the federal courts.

Owens' lyrics, while old, ring clear

ANTHONY MENDOZA

I'm back, and I'm better than ever/ I'm back, and I'm getting this cheddar/ I'm back/ But this time I'm a Cowboy/ I'm back/ And I got 'em saying wow boy.

If you have not already heard, this is the latest in the Terrell Owens saga available on his Web site, www.terrellowens.com.

Owens is following in the steps of Chris Webber, Kobe Bryant, Shaquille O'Neal and Deion Sanders as athletes who should just stick to their multi-million dollar jobs, and stay far away from the microphone.

While his song, which is a diss on his former team, the Philadelphia Eagles, doesn't have the same fire behind it that Tupac vs. Notorious B.I.G. had in the West Coast and East Coast battles nearly 10 years ago, it is fresh to hear someone rapping about something rather than how icy their jewelry is or how big their house is.

It's a brand new year/ Got a brand new team/ I'm a Cowboy now/ No more black and green, Owens raps.

And to the hater who said I wouldn't get my money/ I'm laughing in your face, ha, ha that's funny/ When it come to this game/ I'm the best on the field.

Some said I was gonna sign just a one-year deal/ But I got what I wanted, up-front 10 mil/ Changed the rules of the game, so now how you feel?/ When I work my magic/ When I catch that rock/ I dominate like Shaq when he down on the block/ And this will probably be my best season by far/ No more get my Eagle on/ Meet me at the star.

Translation: Owens got one over on his former coach and general manager Andy Reid when Cowboys owner Jerry Jones gambled on him by offering the malignant wide receiver a multi-year contract and large signing bonus up front.

While Owens laughs all the way to the bank, the return on the T.O. service they paid for will be nothing but beneficial, causing Eagles fans to frown.

Be honest with yourselves, Cowboy fans – you want to win.

The same way K-State basketball fans want to win, even if it means it comes with the baggage someone like Bob Huggins brings. The possibility of the No. 1-, 2- and 3-rated high school prospects in 2007 by Rivals.com playing in Manhattan does quite a bit to change the way one is perceived.

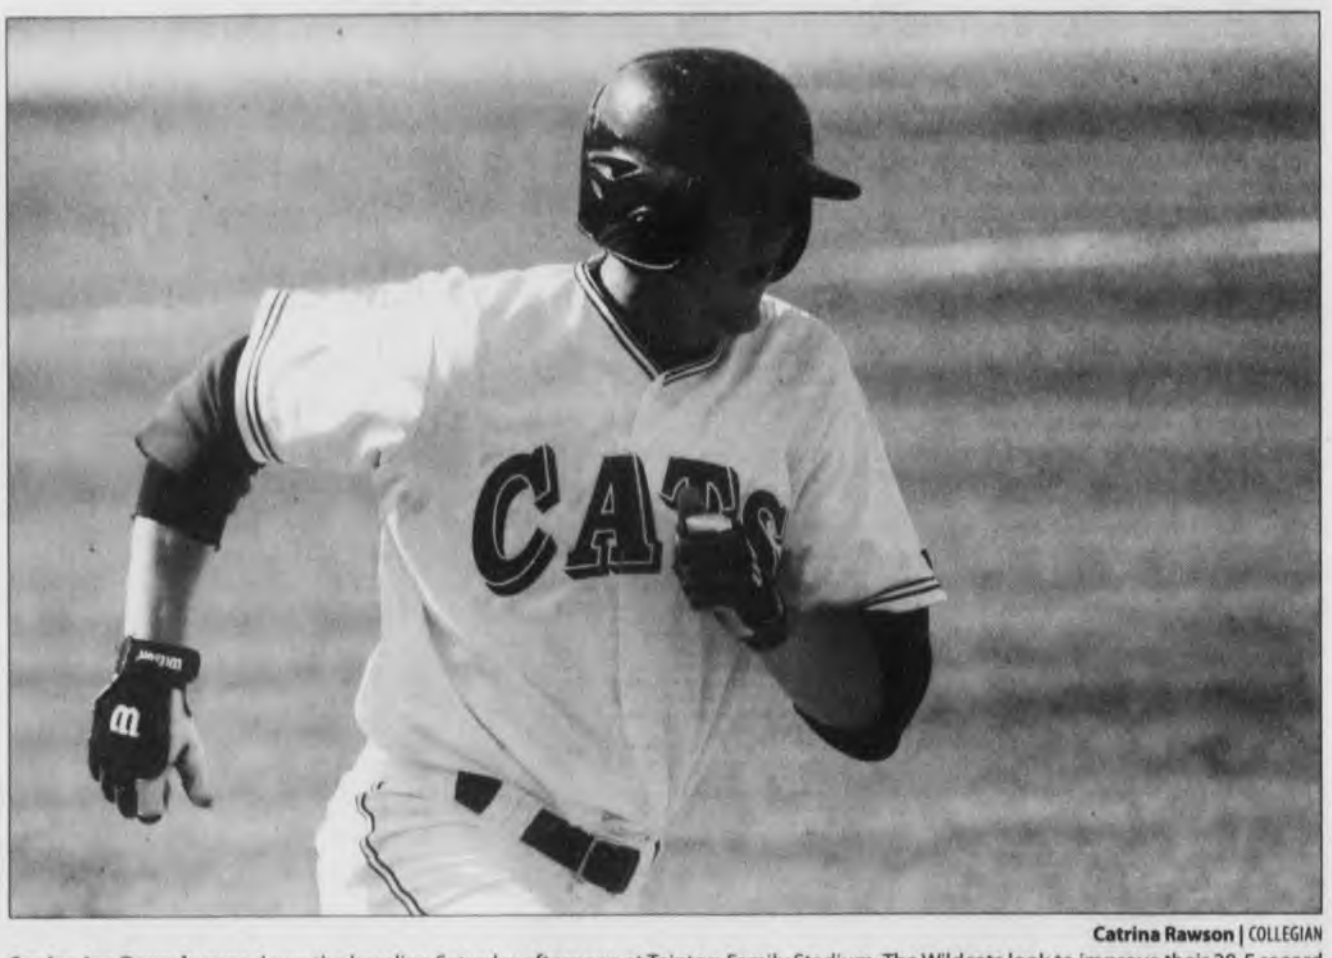
Winning, in general, changes what people think about each other.

Cowboys coach Bill Parcells is only getting older and wider. Jones is getting closer to the age where he should move on, even though his face looks about 20 years younger than the rest of him (he can thank a doctor for that one).

The point is, the Cowboys have a chance to win now, and Owens spread out wide on offense changes the dynamic of a game. The Eagles with Owens made it to the Super Bowl. The same team without the wide receiver got blasted in the playoffs, or in last year's case, implodes internally and playoff talk is never an option.

Cowboy fans, you've had far worse than Owens on your team.

This is after all, "The All-Mug Shot Team," led by former players Nate Newton and Michael Irvin. They even had a house called, "The White House," where they would invite local exotic dancers over for a good time.



It makes the Minnesota Vikings boat-party sex scandal from last year seem like a PG-13 attraction.

Owens with the Cowboys is a good fit.

Him calling out his former team and now divisional rival, is even better for the league, television and even those who wished athletes would just stop rapping already.

K-State, freshman pitcher to square off against Newman

Staff Reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State freshman pitcher Todd Vogel will seek his first career victory when he takes the mound against NAIA Newman at 7 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

For the season, Vogel is 0-0 with a 4.76 earned run average in two appearances. In his only start on March 29 against Chicago State, Vogel allowed three runs and eight hits in 3.2 innings.

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Jared Goedert lines up to field a ground ball against Nebraska. K-State will welcome Newman Wednesday night at Tointon Family Stadium.

Vogel and his Wildcat teammates are hoping to bounce back after losing two of three games to No. 3 Nebraska over the weekend.

There were 6,264 fans in attendance at the weekend series, which set a new Tointon Stadium record for a three-game stint.

K-State (20-5, 2-4 Big 12 Conference) enters tonight's game against Newman in a tie with Nebraska for the best overall record in the Big 12 Conference.

K-State vs. Newman
When: 7 tonight
Where: Tointon Family Stadium
How much: Free with student ID
Radio: 1350 KMAN-AM

Earlier this season, the Wildcats amassed a school-record 16-game winning streak, and the Wildcats reached 20 wins faster than any team in the school's history.

However, with just two conference wins, the Wildcats currently place ninth in the Big 12 standings.

Newman, which is hitting .305 as a team, enters tonight's game with an 18-15 record, not including Tuesday's game against Oklahoma Wesleyan.

From a pitching standpoint, the Jets returned 80 percent of their wins from a year ago.

Newman's pitchers might have trouble containing K-State's hitters since the Cats feature the Big 12's top two batting-average leaders in seniors Joe Roundy and Barrett Rice.

Roundy and Rice pace a Wildcat squad that has posted a combined batting average of .334, which is the second-best mark in the Big 12.

Farr has hit safely in each of his last eight games, averaging .455 in that span.

K-State's pitching staff also ranks near the top of the Big 12. Wildcat pitchers are giving up an average of 3.27 runs per game, the fourth fewest in the conference.

Voters split on KC stadium measures

By Steve Brisendine
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. – Jackson County voters split Tuesday on a pair of tax measures to fund upgrades to Kansas City's sports stadiums, approving a sales tax for renovations and refurbishments but rejecting a separate business tax for a rolling roof at the Truman Sports Complex.

With 100 percent of precincts reporting, the 3/8-cent sales tax passed 49,362 votes to 44,300.

A $200 million plan to install a rolling roof at the complex failed by a narrower margin, 48,673 votes to 44,778.

The sales tax is expected to raise $425 million over 25 years to renovate Arrowhead Stadium, home of the NFL's Kansas City Chiefs, and Kauffman Stadium, where baseball's Kansas City Royals play. That money also would fund such new amenities as a pavilion behind Kauffman Stadium, similar to the one behind Arrowhead.

The rolling roof would have moved between the two stadiums, providing climate control.

The NFL had said Kansas City would get the Super Bowl in 2015 if voters approved the rolling roof, and baseball had also promised the city an All-Star Game sometime after 2010 if both measures are approved.

Supporters argued that passing both questions was the only way to guarantee Kansas City's sports future, while opponents said the teams' owners should not be asking for so much public money.

"I think athletics makes higher profits than almost any other industry," said voter Joyce Merrill, of Kansas City, who voted against both measures. "We don't subsidize anybody else to help them build facilities to help them make more money."

Had the sales tax measure failed, Jackson County would have gone into default on its lease with the teams on Jan. 1, 2007, and the Royals and Chiefs would be free to seek new homes elsewhere.

Neither team has said it would move if the measures failed, but neither has promised to stay.

Supporters feared the teams might leave town, pointing to other cities that have lost franchises that were equally beloved by their communities – Cleveland's Browns and Baltimore's Colts, for example – and over basically the same issue, the lack of adequate stadiums.

Opponents insisted the teams would not go anywhere, regardless of the outcome.

The Royals and Chiefs have signed leases to keep them in Kansas City through 2031 – if both measures pass.

Playboy travels to K-State in search of a student model to pose in upcoming special edition planned for October

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

By Eileen Laux
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Playboy stopped in Manhattan Monday and Tuesday to cast a K-State woman for the "Girls of the Big 12" issue expected on newsstands in October.

Eden Orfanos, producer for the shoot, said Playboy was looking for someone who embodies K-State. The girl also must have that "Girl next door" quality.

"We don't want the typical Playboy model," she said. "We want a girl with a different energy."

She said most of the women are really great and fun to work with. Most are willing to learn and enjoy creating their own look. To audition, women had to be at least 18 years old and a part- or full-time student.

Orfanos said they could choose a woman as soon as today and begin shooting. The shoot could be anything from a couple of single shots to a large group shot.

"We are going to try and depict what represents Manhattan," she said. "This is a lot of production that goes on in one week, but I enjoy it because we get to meet people we would never meet otherwise."

She said there are usually about three to five images per school, but the turnout of the casting ultimately depends on the size of the city.

She said there are at least five girls from K-State they like.

Freelance photographer David Rams said the location is one of the best parts about the job.

"I love some of the locations," Rams said. "It is strange how you could have more fun in a place like Boulder, Colo., than South Beach."

Rams has been a photographer for about 12 years and mainly does the "Girls Of" shoots for Playboy and has done additional work for People Magazine.

Shawna Berry, freshman in pre-professional business administration, attended the casting.

"I had a wild hair and figured why not," Berry said. "The human body is one of the most beautiful things in the world."

She said she has not really thought about what it would be like to be in the pages of Playboy. She said she just wants to have fun, and it would be exciting. Berry said she flips through the magazine every once in a while.

Berry had a friend attend for moral support, and said she would do it again.

"I don't understand why anyone wouldn't want to pose for Playboy," she said.

Megan Stearman, junior at K-State who asked that her major be excluded, said she decided to audition because she always joked to her boyfriend that it was her diet goal to be in the pages of Playboy.

He was the one who convinced her to go through with the application process after they had come to K-State.

"Nudity is not vulgar, and it's not pornography or sex. I would go to a nude beach and not have a problem. I am comfortable with it, because the human body is a beautiful thing."

Megan Stearman
JUNIOR

"I'm not the tall, skinny and big boobs that the usual girls are, but I thought I would give it a shot," she said. "It was fun; I thought I would be nervous, but the photographer was very professional."

She said her family doesn't know yet, but they will find out if she gets chosen.

She bought last November's issue of Playboy with the women of TV's "The Girls Next Door" on the E Network.

She likes the show, which is a reality show that surrounds founder and editor in chief Hugh Hefner's three main girlfriends. She liked the issue and thought it was very tasteful.

"Nudity is not vulgar, and it's not pornography or sex," she said. "I am comfortable with it, because the human body is a beautiful thing."

Decoy numbers can help deter unwanted callers

LAUREN ROHRER

My friend started dating this guy two weeks ago, and they already think they are soul mates. They're already talking about life after college, and it truly makes me want to vomit. She's clearly insane. How can I let her know (gently) that love does not work like this?

Really?

Because if you are under the impression that this kind of thing has a script, then you are the one who is "clearly insane."

True, happy couples can be a little nauseating.

However, it is in our best interest to tolerate them. It is important that, despite our cynicism, we allow a small part of ourselves to believe in the possibility of the unexpected.

Nine times out of 10, they won't live happily ever after. But there's always that one time.

Use the part of your brain that makes you watch the movie "Rudy" at least once a year and try to be supportive. Because if we can't believe in the happy ending, what can we believe in?

So last night I went out, and this guy really starting pestering me for my number. I really wasn't interested, and I don't like giving my phone number away. Is there ever a polite way of getting out of this?

No, there isn't. Be careful with your number in this age of stalker friendly Web sites; it is the only leverage you have.

For times like this, I give out my decoy number. I use the number to a retirement home in my hometown in Oklahoma.

It is good to use a number that can't be confused as you, so he can get the point and not call back. And now that I have shared this wealth of knowledge with you all, I have to go find a new decoy number.

I love to go out and dance, but I really hate Joe's Tap Room. Any suggestions for a place that is less cramped and sweaty?

Wow, me too. I like Longhorns. But then again, I also enjoy Coors Light and cowboys, so to each their own.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

Aries
(March 21 - April 19)
It's ok to spill the wine today, if you feel you really have to. Under no circumstance should you dig that girl, however.

Taurus
(April 20 - May 20)
E-coli. It's what's for dinner.

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
You will make some new friends today. One of them will be on some sort of "sacred quest", which will make a good ice-breaker. "So...what's with the coconuts?"

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
Nobody will understand you today, and it will be impossible to get the simplest idea across. For example, even such a basic concept as, "please untie me and take this gag out of my mouth," will only cause people to stare at you in confusion.

Leo
(July 23 - August 22)
Today you will find a note, folded into quarters, and torn from a steno pad. Surprisingly, it will refer to you. Even more surprisingly, it will refer to you as the object of adoration, someone whom the note's author wishes to engage in "snuggle bunnies" with. Sadly, it will be impossible to determine who wrote it, and nothing will ever come of it.

Virgo
(August 23 - September 22)
Mars is out of alignment, again. Not a good day to hang out with stupid, violent and heavily-armed ex-convicts. Save that for tomorrow.

Libra
(September 23 - October 22)
You will be chased through the streets tonight by a group of wild-eyed short people wearing togas and playing kazoos. Be careful — they may have escaped from a birthday party and should be considered armed and dangerous.

Scorpio
(October 23 - November 21)
Nobody will notice your new haircut, which you will find intensely irritating. It's not as if you always had an irridescent green mohawk, you know?

Sagittarius
(November 22 - December 21)
A hive of naked mole rats will move in with you today. You will find that they are relatively tidy creatures, but that it's difficult to explain their presence to your friends.

Capricorn
(December 22 - January 20)
Good day to use the expression "just dandy" as much as possible. Tomorrow: "Okey dokey" day.

Aquarius
(January 21 - February 18)
This might be a good time to consider night school. That's night, not knight. Unless you enjoy clanking around in armor, of course. Some people do.

Pisces
(February 19 - March 20)
You are being followed by a quiet, rugged man wearing cowboy boots, jeans, a silver belt-buckle, a faded plaid flannel shirt with the sleeves rolled up, and a Carmen Miranda hat. Perhaps you should hurry.

Daniel Aguilar, doctoral student in sociology, gives a speech to attendees about the guerilla warfare events in the nation of Colombia on Tuesday afternoon in the Ramada Inn's Plaza Ballroom as part of the Vernon Larson Lecture series.

Speaker addresses Colombian war

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Daniel Aguilar, doctoral student in sociology, gave a presentation about the guerilla warfare that is happening in Colombia, South America.

Many people at the presentation said they weren't aware of what has powered the situation in Colombia, but felt Aguilar's presentation was informative and interesting.

"It helped that he was actually from Colombia and has lived there," Jenny Beaver, freshman in apparel marketing, said. "I knew some (background of) Colombia, but not as much as he explained."

Aguilar's presentation included the history of Colombia from the 1800s until the present.

"It's important to acknowledge that the problems in Colombia now are from the Colombian War," Aguilar said. "The history of Colombia is a history of inequality."

The end of the Independence War in the 1910s lead to a separation of the political power in Colombia, Aguilar said. These were divided into the conservatives, who wanted a monarchy style of government, and the liberals, who wanted a branch style of power.

"The names of these parties have very different connotations in Colombia than the meanings they have in the United States," Aguilar said. "Because of this, Colombia is known for coffee and the creation of the first synthetic Malaria vaccine, but unfortunately, it is also now known for guerilla warfare and drug trafficking."

Now, with the open economy that was allowed in 1999, the Colombian economy is failing because it cannot keep up with the cheap imports from the United States and Western Europe.

"Kansas corn in Colombia is cheaper than Colombian corn in its own country," Aguilar said.

The poor economy led to peasants agreeing to grow cocoa, poppies, and marijuana on their land in exchange for cash from drug lords.

"This is not the best decision for them," Aguilar said. "But they have few other opportunities."

According to CIA statistics given in the presentation, Colombia has a population of about 42.9 million people and has a per capita income of $6,000. Fifty-five percent of the citizens live below the poverty line, and 10 percent of the richest citizens have 44 percent of the income for the entire country.

Aguilar also included a question-and-answer session at the end. Many students said they felt that the presentation was very insightful.

"I liked how he was honest," Michael Verschelden, freshman in English, said. "He focused on a historical perspective of Colombia and tried to give a less skewed view of how it is over there."

The presentation was part of the Vernon Larson Lecture Series sponsored by the Office of International Programs.

Music presentation introduces students to different cultures

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A presentation of Colombian and Philippine music took place in the Little Theatre in the K-State Student Union Tuesday.

The presentation, "Rhythm of Friendship," was part of International Week.

Presenter Daniel Aguilar said he collected much of the music he presented while growing up in Colombia.

"When growing up in a country you learn about the different types of music," Aguilar, doctoral graduate in sociology, said. "And it's important for students to learn about the music of other cultures."

A portion of the presentation concentrated on the differences in music within the different regions of Colombia.

Aguilar discussed and presented music representative of Caribbean, Andean, Pacific, Flatland and Amazonian regions.

"Even though there are those differences, each of those five regions are connected through a culture," Aguilar said.

Brenton Jayatilaka, an Australian native and student of the University of St. Mary's in Leavenworth, Kan., said he was visiting K-State when he heard about the presentation.

"I wanted to attend because I really enjoy music and I think it's important to branch out and learn about different cultures," Jayatilaka said.

Jayatilaka said he has found American culture to be different than in Australia.

"One thing I noticed in America is how very close they are to their own culture," Jayatilaka said. "You do not hear about other cultures as much."

Katie James, senior in food and nutrition-exercise, said he attended the presentation because she wanted to get involved with the programs offered during International Week.

"It's important to learn about other cultures," James said. "When you learn about other cultures, you learn about yourself."

Aguilar said he thought it was important for students to learn about other cultures and acknowledged that many people are not aware of many cultures.

"It is important for people to first know about other people and other countries," Aguilar said "and this is a very diverse world."

Ballard's renovations nearing completion

By Sarah Hardy
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ballard's Sporting Goods, 1218 Moro St., is finishing its renovations.

The store's exterior will feature the original brick front and a refurnished sign.

The interior will have a repainted tin ceiling, a floor that replicates the court from Ahearn Field House in 1951 and pictures that feature former K-State sports figures, Becky Ballard, store owner, said.

"We mainly tore down the old stuff and brought the building back to its roots," she said.

Ballard said the goal is to have everything finished by April 22, which is the day of the K-State football Spring Game.

"We'll probably have some kind of big celebration the week after the Spring Game," she said.

The space inside of Ballard's will be smaller, as one side of the building will now be rented to Krystallos Inc.

Ballard said the store will still carry all of its original merchandise.

"We were worried about downsizing our square footage, but we feel like we have as much room – if not more – because we're using our space more efficiently," Ballard said.

"We're continuing to carry a lot of the same lines of merchandise, and we'll offer 35 to 40 different styles of K-State T-shirts.

"It will be the place to go if you want a K-State T-shirt."

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said several businesses in Aggieville have done expansions and renovations in the past.

"Ballard's is going to look great when it's done," Sieben said.

"In general, anytime you improve a business, you will see benefits from that."

Abortion foes petition to convene grand jury in abortion death

By Roxana Hegeman
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA – Abortion foes are taking advantage of a seldom-used Kansas law that allows citizens to call for a grand jury investigation when they feel local law enforcement agencies have failed to act.

On Friday, abortion opponents plan to present Sedgwick County with a petition signed by nearly 7,000 local residents asking to convene a grand jury to look at the circumstances surrounding the death of a mentally retarded Texas woman whose family brought her to Wichita for a late-term abortion.

"The deeper we looked into this case, the more we realized there was a lack of justice – a travesty that has been committed," said Troy Newman, president of Operation Rescue in Wichita.

Tiller's office declined to comment on the petition or the case. Julie Burkhart, the spokeswoman for the clinic and director of the abortion rights group Pro Kan Do in Wichita, said neither the clinic nor the group could comment on the case until Wednesday.

Kansas is one of the few states in the nation where citizens can summon a grand jury if they meet certain requirements in state law. Such a petition was used with limited success by pornography opponents in Wichita last year to get an indictment against a store selling adult sexual materials.

Under state law, a grand jury may be summoned within 60 days after a petition is presented bearing the signatures of slightly more than 2 percent of a county's registered voters, said Whitney Watson, spokesman for the Kansas Attorney General's Office.

Newman, a recent California transplant to Kansas, said he had never heard of such a law until David Gittrich, state development director for Kansans for Life, suggested it.

"It is a great tool. The legislative body had enough foresight to know the government is not always going to do its job," Newman said. "It gives the ability to citizens to deliver justice when officials aren't doing their job."

The effort to summon a grand jury follows a ruling last year from the Kansas Board of Healing Arts that cleared Dr. George Tiller of wrongdoing, while an autopsy listed complications from the abortion as the cause of death.

The Board of Healing Arts, which regulates doctors, concluded neither Tiller nor his staff was responsible.

Anti-abortion groups questioned whether the board's investigation was thorough, because Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius appointed many of its members and has received financial support in past campaigns from abortion supporters, including Tiller.

"We trust the Board of Healing Arts conducted a thorough investigation in this matter, and we have no further comment," Nicole Corcoran, spokeswoman for Sebelius, said.

The woman, who suffered from Down Syndrome, was 28 weeks pregnant when her parents took her to the Wichita clinic on Jan. 10, 2005, for an abortion. She died three days later from a massive infection.

Activists contend proper medical monitoring of the woman's condition should have found the infection, and her worsening condition.

Their petition alleges violations of Kansas statutes, including involuntary manslaughter, mistreatment of a dependent adult, failure to report abuse of children and violation of abortion statutes.

Its proponents contend that the woman did not have the capacity to consent to either the sex or the abortion.

If the signatures are found to be valid, a Sedgwick County judge will determine whether the petition bears the proper form to convene a grand jury, Watson said. It will be up to that grand jury to decide what, if any, indictments to return.

Cheryl Sullenger, an abortion opponent who was at the hospital when the woman was rushed in by ambulance, said the group has gotten to know her as a person since investigating the case.

"We are not using her – we are trying to seek justice for her ... she was victimized every step of the way," Sullenger said.

Even the woman's grandmother did not know the circumstances surrounding the death until she saw her granddaughter's picture and story in an advertisement in a Catholic magazine in Texas, Newman said.

Tiller has been the target of protests for years because his clinic performs late-term abortions. His clinic was bombed in 1985, and he was shot by a protester in 1993.

DISTRIBUTION OF NEW K-STATE STUDENT ID CARDS

Distribution of new Kansas State University student wildcat identification cards will begin April 17, 2006 in the Staterooms, located on the first floor of the K-State Student Union. The distribution will be done alphabetically by last name.

Beginning Monday, April 17, students may pick up their cards from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.

last names A - D: Monday, April 17
last names E - J: Tuesday, April 18
last names K - N: Wednesday, April 19
last names O - S: Thursday, April 20
last names T - Z: Friday, April 21

You will only be able to receive your new ID card on the day you are assigned. If you are not able to pick up your new ID card on that day, you will need to wait until after April 24, when you may pick up your new card at the ID Center on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.

There will be no charge, but you must have previously purchased a K-State Wildcat ID card. You will be required to show a photo ID in order to receive your new card. Your old K-State Wildcat ID card, a driver's license, or other photo ID will be accepted.

If you have applied for May graduation, a new card will not be produced for you. If you will be entering graduate school next fall, please contact the ID Center.

The effective date for use of new ID cards for students will be May 22. Until that date, please continue to use your current K-State ID card.

For any questions, please contact the K-State ID Center at (785) 532-6399.

the spotlight on these chairs."

While browsing the exhibit, Anderson said students might notice pieces that look modern or like something they would purchase at a local store. Anderson said many recent designers have studied past designs and work them into new, popular furniture.

"If you think about it, they look refreshingly modern," she said. "What they tell you is there is a timelessness with the modern design."

Mike Dudek, assistant professor of apparel, textiles and interior design, said some well-known designers carried the styles they created in chair design to their buildings and architecture.

"I think a lot of architects work on chairs to test different materials and try different designs," he said.

Over the years, Dudek said many of K-State's chairs have been destroyed or stuck in odd places, forgotten as works of art and used merely as a place to rest.

For students in design, Dudek said he hoped the exhibit would help them see the importance of the work done to mold the future of design.

"They don't understand there's a lot of history and design," Dudek said. "At one point, a chair didn't have four legs. They pushed the envelope to make chairs in different shapes."

Dudek said many of the chairs in the exhibit are pieces of art worth thousands of dollars to some collectors.

For students who see the exhibit, Dudek said he encourages them to look at different styles and types of chairs, even the ones their parents own, to see if they might be valuable.

"I can just see all of these chairs disappearing and showing up on eBay," Dudek said.

When looking at the pieces combined with the textiles, Dudek said he hoped people would value the work of designers of the past.

"We would hope they would appreciate the amount of effort was put into it," he said. "It's not just putting together four legs and a seat and calling it a chair."

Delay resigns to avoid a tough re-election race

By David Espo
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Succumbing to scandal, former House Majority Leader Tom DeLay said Tuesday he will resign from Congress in the face of a tough re-election race,.

"I have no fear whatsoever about any investigation into me or my personal or professional activities," DeLay said in a statement to constituents. At the same time, he said, "I refuse to allow liberal Democrats an opportunity to steal this seat with a negative, personal campaign."

He said the voters of his Houston-area district "deserve a campaign about the vital national issues that they care most about ... and not a campaign focused solely as a referendum on me."

DeLay relinquished the post as House majority leader last fall after his indictment in Texas as part of an investigation into the allegedly illegal use of funds for state legislative races. In January, he decided against trying to get his leadership post back

Last week, former DeLay aide Tony Rudy pleaded guilty to conspiring with lobbyist Jack Abramoff and others to corrupt public officials, and he promised to help the broad federal investigation of bribery and lobbying fraud that already has resulted in three convictions.

Burns, Groene wrap up term, platform goals

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

They got it done.

Contracted tuition rates. Restructured student service fees. Online teacher evaluations. Graduated student teacher workshops.

Student Body President and Vice President Michael Burns and Grant Groene, respectively, have accomplished all four prongs of their platform.

The pair will step down from office at tonight's Student Senate turnover meeting, and Lucas and Katie Maddy will be sworn in as their successors.

Burns and Groene's first platform issue was developing a contracted tuition rate.

The Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies was formed by Senate in September to examine the current five-year tuition strategy and form a set of guidelines to use in considering future tuition strategies.

The tuition ad-hoc committee announced its final five-year tuition strategy proposal on March 15, and the committee recommended a predicted tuition rate for Fiscal Years 2008-12 after investigating a differential rate and a flat tuition rate model, Burns said.

The model would increase tuition during the five-year period by $15 per credit hour per year for resident and non-resident undergraduate and graduate students.

The committee also proposed the redistribution of college-specific fees, and it recommended that K-State increase the per credit hour rate by $1.55 per year for three years for all colleges, according to the proposal.

For the remaining two years of the plan, part of the per credit hour increase would be allocated by university administrators for the colleges that currently do not have college-specific fees.

"Grant and I set out to give students the ability to predict what it would cost to get them higher education," Burns said. "Students won't pay the same per credit hour for four years, but they will have the ability to predict."

For the second prong of their platform, Burns and Groene announced the elimination of transcript, graduation and Career and Employment Services fees at Feb. 3's Senate meeting.

The $15 graduation fee is no longer in place, and the $8 transcript fee and $30 fee for certain Career and Employment Services will be eliminated as of July 1.

Burns said in-state tuition will increase by about 0.9 percent and out-of-state tuition will increase by 0.2 percent in FY 2007 to reconcile the elimination of fees.

Burns and Groene's third platform issue was implementing online teacher evaluations through the Wildcat Information Network. The evaluations will be on www.win.ksu.edu by April 10, Groene said.

"It took a little while longer than we had hoped for," Groene said. "We originally wanted them implemented at the start of the spring semester, but it took some time to get programming worked out so that students could access it at any time."

Burns said students will be allowed to access an evaluation only once per instructor, per class. This is to ensure ratings are not altered or tainted, he said.

The pair's final campaign promise was to initiate graduate student teacher workshops. Burns said he and Groene have submitted a pre-proposal for the workshops to the provost's office.

One issue with implementing the

The bond surplus review committee allocated $1 million for a fire suppression system in the K-State Student Union.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said the new fire suppression system will help protect the investment students have made in the Union.

The Union has an alarm system tied to the Manhattan Fire Department. The $1 million will fund an automated sprinkler system that minimizes damage in case of a fire.

"If something was to happen, we would protect future K-State students," Connaughton said. "This has been (the students') building from day one, so I think that's a major thing that students are protecting their investment."

The new system also will bring the Union up to safety standards, Connaughton said.

"If we do any type of remodeling in the building then we would need the Union to be totally sprinkled," he said. "And in order to attach a parking garage or a

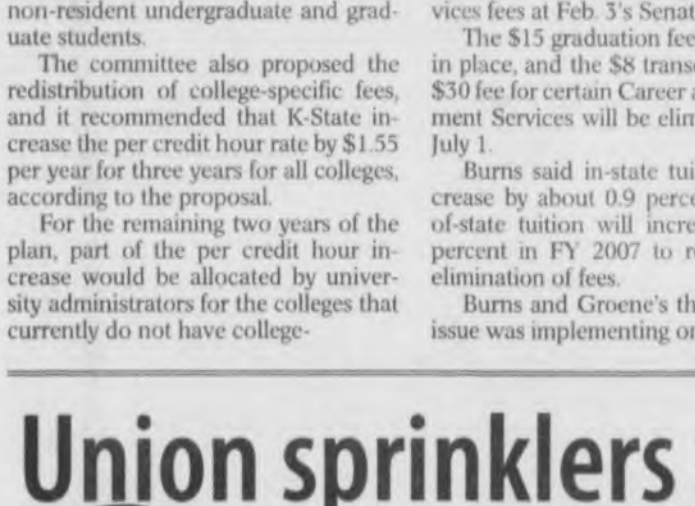
The Riley County Police Department received a report of bones found under the Kansas Highway 18 bypass in the Kansas River, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.



The bones appeared to be human and were sent to K-State for study, he said.

Michael Finnegan, professor of sociology, anthropology and social work, will study the bones and determine their type, Quintanar said.

Finnegan said he could not comment on the findings.

"I don't have any information on that," Finnegan said.

Information found will be given to the detective in charge of the case, Finnegan said.

Saudi Arabian ambassador explains misconceptions

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

There are many misconceptions about the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, Prince Turki Al-Faisal, Saudi Arabian ambassador to the United States said Wednesday in a speech in Forum Hall.

The speech was part of International Week.

Some common misconceptions the prince said he has experienced involve the beliefs that Saudi Arabians ride camels, women are tied to the kitchen and the country is entirely composed of oil wells.

"Believe me, ladies and gentlemen, there is a lot going on under the desert sun," he said.

All Saudi Arabia has accomplished is poorly conveyed to Americans, Al-Faisal said. Saudi Arabia joined the World Trade Organization, and joining was an ordeal.

"It was critical that every last condition was met without jeopardizing our faith, values and traditions," he said.

Saudi Arabia is a fairly young country, only having been in existence for 75 years.

While Saudi Arabia is a monarchy, the king rules by consent and does not make decisions without consulting others, Al-Faisal said. He used the example of King Abdul Aziz in the 1940s to explain the steps a Saudi Arabian king must go through to make changes.

In the 1940s, Aziz wanted to bring radio to the new kingdom, but several advisers were against the idea, fearing it was the work of the devil, Al-Faisal said. The king turned a radio on during prayers, and it broadcast religious messages. He called the advisers who opposed radio and spoke to them about their objections.

"How could the work of the devil carry the word of God," King Aziz asked the group, Al-Faisal said.

Al-Faisal used this example to explain

Kansas teacher resigns

GARDEN CITY, Kan. — A high school teacher who faces felony charges of unlawful sexual relations with a student has resigned. Nadine Nunnelee, 40, was charged Jan. 10 with five counts of unlawful sexual relations with a 16-year-old student at Garden City High School. She submitted her resignation Monday after being suspended by the school district.

CBS confirms Couric deal

NEW YORK — On her 15th anniversary on "Today," Katie Couric told viewers Wednesday she's leaving NBC to join CBS, where she will become the first woman to anchor a network weekday evening newscast alone. "I wanted to tell all of you out there who have watched the show for the past 15 years that after listening to my heart and my gut — two things that have served me pretty well in the past — I've decided I'll be leaving 'Today'" she said.

Republicans tweak deal

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Conservative Republicans tweaked their alternative to a bipartisan guest worker proposal for illegal immigrants Wednesday as Democrats pressed for a vote that would put most illegally in the United States on a path to citizenship. The latest counterproposal to a bill by Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., would base the chance of citizenship largely on if they were here before a cutoff date.

Cowboy Olympics teams compete in ag-based events

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Pickup trucks, wheelbarrows and rodeo clowns took center stage at Weber Arena on Wednesday night for the annual Cowboy Olympics.

The event was sponsored by the College of Agriculture Student Council as part of its week-long Ag Fest.

More than 20 student teams and one faculty team participated in six timed events that determined the competition's champion.

Tasks like rolling a teammate in a barrel, navigating a wheelbarrow obstacle course and roping a dummy steer tested participants' coordination and agility.

Pushing a pickup truck, driving a T-post into the ground and carrying 50-pound feed sacks challenged competitors' strength and endurance.

Emilie Miller, senior in animal science, said the members of her team, the Udder Crew, also belong to Collegiate Cattle Women.

Miller said the team decided to enter the Cowboy Olympics because the women enjoyed competing in last year's event.

"It's fun just to make a fool out of yourself," she said. "Deep down you want to do good, but it's lots of fun no matter how you finish."

Team members sweated, strained and grinned through minor scrapes and falls to finish each event as quickly as possible.

After her team finished its events and returned to the stands, Miller said, "It was a good time and about the best workout I've had in a long time."

Not every team had a farming or ranching background.

Andrew Freeman, junior in landscape design, said his team, Throck Stock, came from the outskirts of agriculture.

"Three of us are city boys," Freeman said. "But we thought we'd give it a shot. It should be quite an experience."

Freeman said pushing the pickup truck was the most difficult event, and driving a T-post was the easiest.

"I do it all the time in landscaping, so I really had kind of an unfair advantage," he said.

Each event drew an enthusiastic response from the crowd.

Audience members, many of them friends and classmates of competitors, laughed and cheered at both victories and bloopers.

Allison Crook, sophomore in agricultural communications, said she enjoyed the night's events.

"It's been a lot of fun to watch a lot of people go out there and do some pretty ridiculous things," Crook said. "And it's a good way to get people involved in Ag Fest."

As of March 1, the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383 school district has received $518,491 from the quarter-cent sales tax proceeds.

It is estimated that the district will receive about $900,000 by the end of the 2005-06 school year, said Mary Tolar, associate director of civic leadership for K-State, at Wednesday night's USD 383 Board of Education meeting.

"The sales tax has served its intended role to provide resources for the incoming students from Fort Riley," Tolar said. "All signs point to a brighter financial future."

So far, $234,096 of the sales tax funding has been spent on instructional and student activities.

The quarter-cent sales tax initiative was passed by popular vote on April 5, 2005. The tax will remain intact for a three-year time period or until the district raises $5.4 million.

In other business, the board discussed the current policy of medical supervision in local schools.

According to current policy, which was approved in May 2005, students can receive over-the-counter medicine in schools with written permission from parents alone. The signature of a physician is required for students to receive prescriptions.

Before May 2005, the signatures of both a guardian and a physician were required for a student to receive any type of medication at school.

The board was presented a written statement from five local physicians who favor the current policy. Involving physicians in over-the-counter medication decisions is unnecessary and would lead to excessive paperwork and administration time for all involved, the document states.

However, school nurses have concerns with the current regulations, including issues of student safety and liability.

Students often came to school with pills in envelopes or wrapped in Kleenex, medication was sent in the "wrong" bottle, incorrect dosages were recommended, and parents often were difficult to reach for clarification, a written statement presented by USD 383 nurses states.

"It is recommended that a written request from a healthcare provider accompany medications to school," said Tamara Dorsett, school nurse at Manhattan High School West Campus, which has students in grades 10-12. "Over-the-counter medications are not benign and carry great potential for harm if they are misused."

Another concern is the difference between elementary school and high school students.

Many high school students are capable of being responsible for their own over-the-counter medications, though there are still concerns, Dorsett said.

There is also concern that if the district makes it too hard for older students to take the medicine they need, it will encourage them to have medications at school "under the radar," said board president Randy Martin.

"As children get older, trying to call a physician at 7 at night for a 17-year-old to get permission to take Tylenol, parents are going to look for other ways," Martin said.

It also was brought to the board's attention that USD 383 does not meet state recommendations in terms of nurse per student ratio.

"The state recommends one nurse per 750 regular students," said Cheryl Wiegert, school nurse at Lee Elementary, Woodrow Wilson Elementary and Marlatt Elementary. "I alone have over 920 students that I'm responsible for, and that includes many, many special ed students."

The district medication supervision policy and school nurse staffing will be on future meeting agendas for further consideration.

2005-06 SGA term ends tonight with swearing-in of president, senators

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate turnover will take place tonight at a second Senate meeting.

Newly elected student senators and the new student body president and vice president will be sworn in for the first Senate meeting of the 2006-07 term, Tyson Moore, Senate chair, said.

During the first Senate meeting of the evening, current senators will complete all business items on the agenda, Michael Burns, outgoing student body president, said.

Bill Muir, faculty representative for Student Governing Association, said he will make a motion to sine die, or without date, after the meeting has ended. This will officially mark the end of the 2005-06 Senate term.

Muir said Moore then will administer the oath of office to the new student senators. Burns and Grant Groene, outgoing student body vice president, will administer the oath of office to student body president and vice president-elect Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy, respectively.

Moore will introduce a resolution on the attorney general nominee review committee and ask for nominations for Senate Chair, Muir said.

Burns said the meeting will adjourn after nominations are made.

"At the start of the April 13 meeting, Senate will vote for the most appropriate chair," Burns said.

In the event of a tie for Senate chair, Moore will vote to break the tie, Burns said.

TO THE POINT

Donating blood takes little time; benefits many

Blood is known as the fluid of life. We all have it, and we don't know when we might need more.

Blood banks at hospitals and through organizations like the American Red Cross ensure blood supplies are ready for any emergency, big or small.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The volunteer process is a relatively simple one, considering the good that comes from it. It only takes about an hour of a person's day for the entire process. In addition to how easy it is to give blood, this life-giving process can be repeated every 56 days.

Aside from the emotional rewards of donating and the occasional T-shirt, there are other advantages to donating blood. Because of the rigorous testing to make sure blood is safe, it is also an inexpensive way to discreetly test for various diseases. All blood is screened for Hepatitis B and C, as well as HIV, syphilis and other diseases. Donors also are tested for anemia in the screening process.

Despite the ease and advantages of donating blood, the totals for this week's Bleed Purple Blood Drive at K-State are not reaching donation goals. We should be able to take one hour out of our week to give this gift. And those who might not be able to make a donation should help spread the word and convince friends and coworkers to make the sacrifice.

Let's reach that 800-pint goal.

Scientific speech

Bush censors expert findings on global warming

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

When I first heard about NASA's new public affairs policy, I couldn't have been happier. The longer I thought about it, though, the more upset I was that NASA even had to issue such a thing.

Creating the policy took NASA two months after James E. Hansen, director of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies, complained that the Bush Administration has been censoring him. (It was issued only two weeks after 60 Minutes covered the story.)

In this ingenious piece of literature, NASA clarifies that its employees no longer need to have a public affairs office staff member present during interviews. Think about it – we now need a policy to say it's OK for scientists to have free speech.

The interesting thing about this whole ordeal is really the subject Hansen said he was prevented from discussing: global warming – an unpopular subject in a country addicted to power, greed and oil.

In fact, global warming is so unpopular, Hansen said the government went beyond stopping him from speaking publicly on the issue. Political appointees went as far as to make noticeable changes in the scientists' press releases and Internet presentations.

Hey, what better way to prove something you don't like isn't a problem than to completely control those who are at the top of its field?

It turns out, all Hansen was trying to suggest when he was censored was the need to reduce the emissions from greenhouse gases associated with the warming. Outrageous, I know.

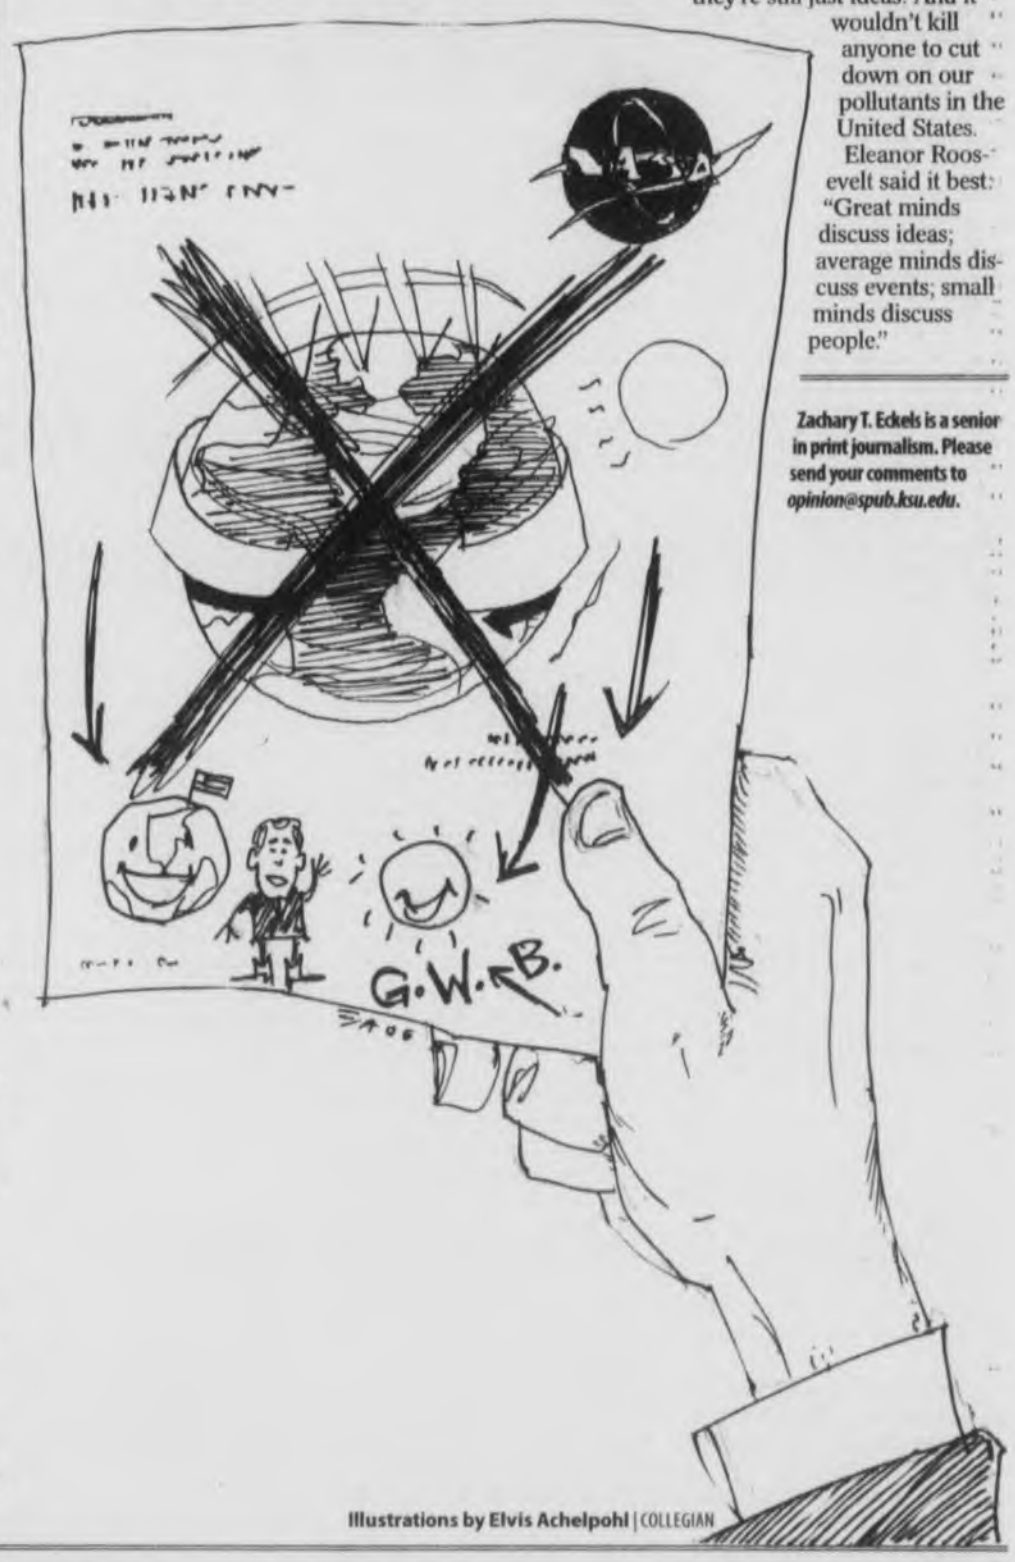
The fact is, global warming does exist. Nobody can deny that the Earth's temperature is slowly rising and, according to the New York Times, has already risen a full degree since 1900. Since 1970, the rate of warming has nearly tripled.

The differences in opinion between the politicians and the scientists come from whether humans are to blame.

Scientists point at models that show how closely the warming is imitating our emissions of greenhouse gases.

The Bush administration took a much different route. In 2003, it decided carbon dioxide – the main cause of global warming – is not a pollutant and is not harmful. Let's just say some fat cats saved a few pennies without having to worry about regulations.

I think it should be pretty clear that the scientists are the ones to believe on this matter. These are the people who have devoted their lives to explaining and solving this silent threat looming over the future of our children.



Sadly, though, this issue still usually comes down to politics instead of data. When it's brought up, the tree-hugging hippie liberal-bashing begins and common sense ends.

My only hope is that this is the only part of our government that has had to put up with the burden of having the facts changed. I can't imagine how awful our country could get if a future president could simply make up facts whenever he or she wished.

Even if you take Bush's side on the issue of global warming, you have to realize how dangerous censorship like this could be. Besides, even if the experts on this subject are wrong, they're still just ideas. And it wouldn't kill anyone to cut down on our pollutants in the United States.

School discipline turns extreme; police blamed

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

What is going on in our schools?

My grandfather was a math teacher and a coach, and he managed to control students with a look.

Now it takes a Thomas A. Swift Electric Rifle.

Otherwise known as a taser, the weapon isn't considered a firearm in the United States, according to the Canadian Broadcasting Company.

The guns can deliver up to 50,000 volts of electricity, depending on how they are used.

Schools from Minnesota to Florida have allowed the use of tasers on students as young as 6 years old, according to an article by the Wichita Eagle posted on Officer.com.

School officials say it's not their responsibility to tell police officers patrolling the school what kind of force to use, the Orlando (Fla.) Sentinel said.

It's far too easy to shift blame to any given police department for taser incidents when the school district requested police presence as security.

The Geary County school district has no policy in place governing the use of tasers by school resource officers, Charles Volland, district communications coordinator, said.

The school resource officers are working through the Geary County Police Department, he said.

"They have access to them, yes," Volland said.

Yet, in Riley County, the Riley County Police Department does not carry tasers when it provides security in the schools, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

"We don't have them," Quintanar said. "We don't use them."

Manhattan school resource officers do not carry weapons of any type, Michele Jones, district communications coordinator, said.

"They have radios, but no guns, no tasers, nothing like that," she said.

RCPD officers constantly are on patrol at the West and East Campuses of Manhattan High School, Jones said.

RCPD officers are in both Manhattan high schools and all Riley County schools, Quintanar said.

So the question remains – what is going wrong in our schools?

Have things gotten so bad since I graduated that students need to be controlled with weapons?

Even officers who have gone through training and have experience can be overwhelmed and pushed beyond their limits.

When the shootings at Kent State University in Ohio occurred on May 4, 1970, the nation was in uproar. Kent State students became violent when protesting the U.S. invasion of Cambodia. This was during the Vietnam War, and tensions were high.

Then the National Guard opened fire on the protesting students.

Admittedly, the National Guard must have felt trapped. It was in a field enclosed on three sides, and when it tried to retreat, it was followed by the students, who were throwing things and screaming.

But it remains that the National Guard had guns, and the students did not.

So who feels trapped in our nation's high schools today?

What has gone so wrong that security officers have to be there in the first place?

Students aren't allowed to carry weapons, but school resource officers working through police departments are.

But the idea of carrying weapons in schools is a bad one. Students aren't animals to be controlled. They're people, and if there's a problem that makes them afraid to be in a school, that problem should be solved by the school and not by the police, who will be blamed when something goes wrong – especially when a district doesn't have a policy governing the use of tasers.

The Fourum used to entertain me. Now, it just reminds me of high school.

Yeah, this is for the girl at the post office in the white hoodie: This is the scruffy guy in the black shirt behind you in line. We should get married sometime or something.

To the guy who returned my headphones from the Library: I really appreciate it, and if I was old enough, I'd love to take you out for a drink.

To the girl that stole my Harry Potter snow globe: My little brother is looking down from heaven right now and frowning at you, because it was his.

And if it was a boy who stole it, who has the balls to steal from a dead kid? Honestly?

Kathleen Sebelius is an angel and my future wife. Please be kind to her, amen.

Is it normal to be on your Web-cam in the middle of the Student Union? I'm a little bit afraid of this guy.

So I would just like to say that I love how The Right Wing Conspiracy radio show uses actual Republicans calling in as quote "stupid liberals" to back up their points. That's great. Thanks a lot guys.

Lawyers debate homosexuals' civil rights

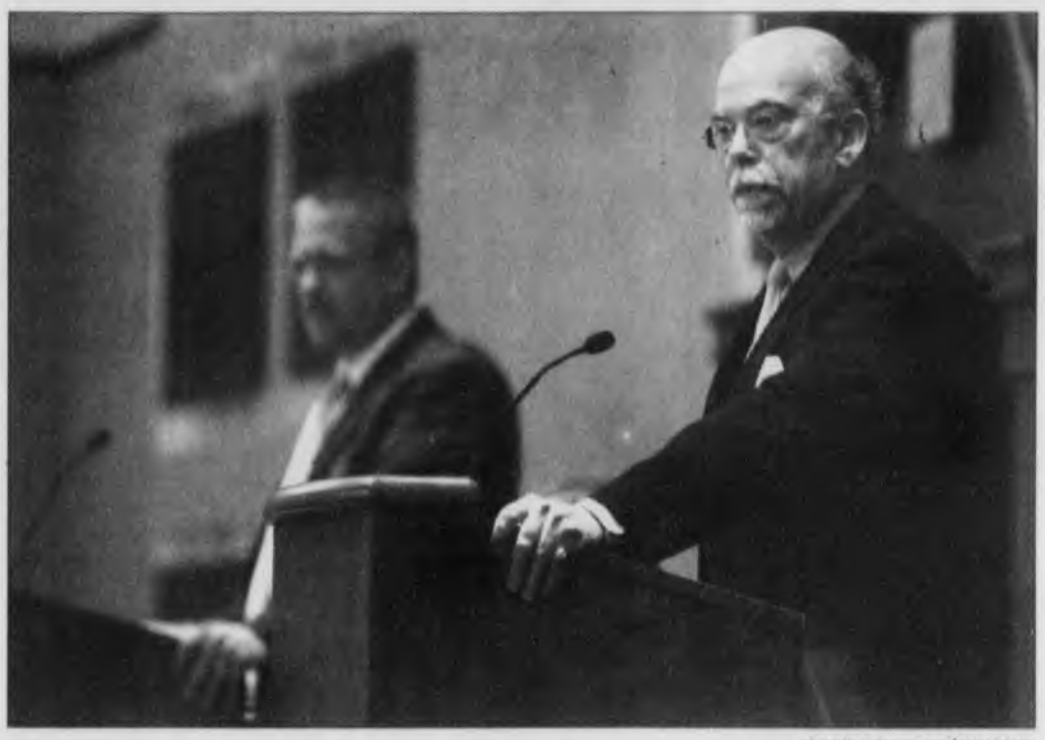
By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two attorneys debated the civil rights of homosexual couples Wednesday night in the K-State Alumni Center.

As part of the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series, Pedro Irigonegaray and Joel Oster addressed concerns about legalizing same sex marriages and the definition of marriage.

About 200 people attended the debate, which was sponsored by the Office of the Provost and other patrons.

Irigonegaray, a civil rights attorney, spoke in favor of equal rights for homosexual couples. Oster, senior legal counsel for the Alliance Defense Fund, defended traditional family values. Bill Rich, associate dean of academic affairs and professor of law at Washburn Law School, served as the moderator for the debate.



Rich began the evening with introductions of the speakers and an outline of ground rules for the debate. He said April 5 was an appropriate time for the debate, as it was exactly one year ago that Kansas adopted the same sex marriage amendment. Both panelists were given seven minutes to introduce the topic and their perspective.

"If there is one thing you leave with tonight, let it be this: kids matter – children matter. The existence of this society depends on the children today," Oster said.

He emphasized the belief that marriage throughout history has existed to manage procreation.

"Marriages are singled out for protection so that babies can be connected to and raised by their biological mother and father," he said.

Oster said the most important legal issue in this matter is deciding who defines marriage. He said he believes it is the decision of the people as a whole.

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

Responding to a question, Pedro Irigonegaray speaks during the Dorothy L. Thompson Civil Rights Lecture Series while Joel Oster listens on Wednesday evening in the K-State Alumni Center. Irigonegaray and Oster debated "Civil Rights and Same Sex Couples."

Irigonegaray began by saying he was honored to see so many young people interested in civil rights. He then summarized the ideas he would be speaking about.

"I am here to proclaim that same sex marriage is a benefit to society," he said.

Irigonegaray said he believed same sex marriage is a benefit to children and education.

"Homosexual and transgender families do not any longer stand alone in the battle for justice," he said. "We will succeed in getting equality."

Irigonegaray said he believed it is important to consider children when discussing homosexuals' civil rights. However, he said it is not necessary for a child to be raised by parents in a traditional marriage in order to be a good citizen.

"What is truly important for children is love, caring and understanding," he said. "Homosexual parents can do that as well as heterosexuals."

Rich asked the pair a series of questions he generated himself.

The questions Rich addressed to the panelists focused on such issues as whether homosexuality is a choice or an inherent trait and whether same sex marriages cause personal harm to other people.

After about an hour, Rich read questions he received on note cards from members of the audience. Oster and Irigonegaray were each given the opportunity to answer inquiries on the topic.

Each panelist was given five minutes to share his closing thoughts.

Angelique Beasley, sophomore in anthropology, attended the debate. She said she favors equal rights for same sex couples.

"Everyone has a right to happiness, but the laws right now are really singling out people, and that's not right," she said.

Beasley said listening to the debate made her more interest in the topic.

"I still feel the same way, but I'm fired up even more," she said. "I think kids who are raised in homosexual homes grow up to be even more compassionate and understanding than others."

Ben Davis, junior in political science, said he has views similar to Oster's.

"I simply feel this way because it is logical," Davis said.

Davis said he was not surprised by the arguments Irigonegaray presented.

"I have heard their side before, and it's usually a lot of the same arguments," he said. "They use the claim of personal attacks, and it got kind of redundant."

Davis said hearing the debate was beneficial.

"This was a good thing for people to hear, and it's good to see others benefit from it," he said.

Businesses use online applications for hiring

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some Manhattan businesses have switched to using online applications in their hiring processes.

Steve Hohl, general manager for Old Chicago, 100 Manhattan Town Center, said the restaurant switched to online applications three years ago.

"Everything today is online, and it just makes it so much easier," Hohl said. "With us you can apply online at the Web site, or you can apply in the store."

Hohl said online applications make the process more organized.

"In a matter of minutes, the application is sent to our office computer, and we can look the applicant up online, and then it's all stored on the computer," he said.

Hohl said after someone fills out an online application he schedules a face-to-face interview so he can meet them.

Mikki Anderson, Old Chicago employee, said the online application asked general questions, including questions about her personality.

"There were lots of questions, and you had to answer things like whether you strongly disagreed or just disagreed, and those were kind of annoying," Anderson, junior in elementary education, said.

Anderson said she appreciated the convenience of the online application process.

"It was nice because I could just do it at home -- and online is just always more convenient," Anderson said.

Donald Darfler, Little Apple Brewery manager, 1110 Westloop Center, said the restaurant does not use online applications and does not plan to switch in the future.

"In a college town you get so many applications that we just don't know what to do with them all," Darfler said. "Occasionally we may use one for (a) management position."

Darfler said applications are too vague to base any decisions on, and he prefers to make decisions after a face-to-face interview.

"These applications are just basic information so it gives us a chance to get to know them better," he said. "It's just one more step to make sure the character matches with what you want."

Flag laws should be enforced, respected

Editor,

This is in response to Daniel Kirksey's April 3 claim that "burning the flag is unforgivable."

First, if one is so concerned that the American flag be given proper respect, why not insist the federal laws governing the treatment of the flag be enforced?

This means requiring people either to illuminate their flag properly or to take it down each and every night. It means the flag shouldn't be flown during inclement weather; it shouldn't be used for advertising or sewn into clothing or impressed on anything, such as a napkin, intended to be discarded after use. This also means burning the flag when it's too worn to fly.

Second, how can burning a flag, even as a sign of disrespect, be unforgivable in a Christian nation? How can any crime or sin be unforgivable?

I remember a little prayer I learned as a child. Perhaps you know it. Part of it says, "forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." I think this means we only deserve as much mercy from God as we are willing to extend to others.

We Americans are collectively in big, big trouble come Judgment Day if the quality of our mercy stops short at forgiving people who burn flags.

Woods tries for 5th jacket

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

Anybody who watched The Masters Tournament last year remembers the miraculous chip shot by Tiger Woods on the 16th hole during the final round that somehow found its way into the bottom of the cup after seemingly stopping twice – once at the top of the hill and again as it was nearing the cup.

Anybody who watched SportsCenter that night and in the subsequent days also should remember that Woods defeated Chris DiMarco, on the first playoff hole (with a birdie) to capture his fourth Green Jacket.

But does anybody remember that Woods bogeyed his last two holes to fall into a tie with DiMarco, who barely missed holing out a chip on his final hole that would have given him the title?

With the first major championship of the 2006 PGA Tour starting today, the television likes to remind everybody what happened last year. But it doesn't tell the whole story.

Woods struggled in the final holes and had to grind to make the playoff, giving DiMarco every opportunity to win.

DiMarco could not put Woods away, thus allowing him to win on the first playoff hole.

My point is that each year the Masters brings the excitement of having the best players in the world competing for golf's most coveted jacket.

The feeling of not knowing what could happen makes it that much sweeter.

Phil Mickelson won the 2004 Masters, capturing his first-ever major championship – a feat many people thought he would never accomplish.

In 2003, Mike Weir became the first left-handed golfer and first Canadian to win the Masters.

And Woods became just the third player ever to successfully defend at Augusta National Golf Club in 2002, when he won his second-consecutive and third Masters title.

Woods will tee off at 9:23 a.m. CDT and will be looking to win his fifth title at the 70th Masters Tournament.

A victory this weekend would put him one behind the record of six Masters, owned by the great Jack Nicklaus. If Woods were to win, that also would put him at 11 total majors – seven behind Nicklaus, who holds the record for most majors in a career with 18.

Now, I am not willing to sit here and give the Green Jacket to Woods just yet, because there are 89 other golfers just itching to de-throne him. But how can you bet against the guy?

He is third on the money list after six tournaments and has two victories and three top 10s.

He owns the record for scoring average at Augusta and has the lowest 72-hole score with an 18-under par. Did I mention that lately he has been starting to look like the Tiger we all know from 2000-01 when he won four consecutive majors?

But again, there are some names Woods will need to watch out for.

I think this year's Masters will be won by a big-name golfer, so don't expect someone like Ben Curtis or Rich Beem to take home the title.

I will be surprised if someone outside of the Big Five of Woods, Vijay Singh, Retief Goosen, Mickelson and Ernie Els wins the tournament, because the course has been lengthened again and experience will play a huge role in determining the winner.

No matter what happens, the back nine on Sunday at Augusta again will give fans a chance to sit back and watch a great battle between golfers playing at the top of their game because that's just what happens when the Green Jacket is on the line.

Team poise, Tapia's grand slam boost Wildcats to 16-3 win

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Some teams might have overlooked a midweek game against an opponent from the NAIA, but K-State showed poise and focus after defeating Newman 16-3 on Wednesday night at Tointon Family Stadium.

"We are really trying to work on staying focused and handling adversity much better right now," said senior Joe Roundy after going 2-for-3 with two runs batted in and three runs scored. "Tonight was a great example of that because any team could've just acted like 'Oh, we are playing an NAIA school tonight, so we can let down a little bit,' and obviously that did not happen tonight."

Roundy has hit safely in 23 of 26 games this season and leads the Wildcats with a .474 batting average. He also has 11 multi-RBI games this season.

The game started with K-State (21-5, 2-4 Big 12 Conference) freshman pitcher Todd Vogel retiring the side in the first inning, and the Wildcats tallied six runs in the bottom of the first to take a lead they would not relinquish.

Vogel (1-0) lasted four innings, striking out three batters and only surrendering one hit.

Newman starting pitcher Pat Allen (1-4) lasted only 1.2 innings and gave up eight total runs, with six earned. He gave up six hits and only struck out three batters.

K-State scored 15 runs in the first four innings and added an insurance run in the sixth when sophomore Cris Tapia hit a sacrifice fly to center field, scoring freshman Rob Vaughn, who tagged up from third base.

The only runs scored by Newman came in the ninth inning when the game was nearly wrapped up. The Jets entered the ninth down 16-0, but went on a mini run, scoring three runs to lose by a final score of 16-3.

With K-State ahead 11-0 heading into the bottom of the fourth inning, Tapia came up to bat with the bases loaded and no outs. He fell behind in the count 0-2 and then crushed a ball over the right-field wall for a grand slam, putting the Wildcats ahead 15-0.

Top basketball recruit visits K-State

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The name Jason Bennett was foreign to nearly all K-Staters a couple of weeks ago.

K-State students and faculty might not be used to having the top high school basketball recruits in the country come to Manhattan in search of a basketball program for which to play, but the arrival of basketball coach Bob Huggins has brought with it a media carnival and big names.

Today, Bennett, a 7-foot-2, 240-pound center from Jacksonville, Fla., is veering off Interstate Highway 70 on exit 313 to pay a visit to K-State, the Little Apple, and most importantly, Huggins.

"I think a large part of why he's coming is because he wants to play for Huggins," said Gates, recruiting editor for Powercat Illustrated. "I think if we hired another coach, it probably wouldn't have happened."

In fact, speculation surfaced Wednesday morning that Bennett – a five-star recruit according to Rivals.com – already committed to Huggins. The Topeka Capital-Journal ran an article claiming Butch Estes, coach for Miami-Dade College in Florida, said he heard Bennett already cemented his spot on the K-State roster.

"I'll be shocked if he doesn't come, but you'll never get anyone to say it on the record at this point," Gates said Wednesday morning.

Whether he has officially decided to come to K-State, one thing's for sure – it is no mystery that Bennett wants to play for Huggins.

Bennett, who played at Jacksonville Arlington Country Day, committed to play for Huggins in fall 2004 when Huggins was still coaching at Cincinnati. Bennett also has ties to Frank Martin – Huggins' former assistant coach for the Bearcats and now assistant coach at K-State – through Martin's 15-year coaching stint in the Miami high-school circuit and through Bennett's involvement with the Miami Tropics, an AAU team, Gates said.

When K-State lured Huggins to Manhattan, Bennett decided to take a peek, said Rex Morgan, Bennett's coach at Arlington Country Day.

Wide receivers learn Prince's new offensive style

By Michael Ashford
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This spring, K-State is transitioning from former coach Bill Snyder's option offense to coach Ron Prince's version of the West Coast offense.

On Mondays, when the K-State coaches throw new segments of the offensive scheme at the players, senior wide receiver Yamon Figurs feels lost at times.

Not high-school lost or even middle-school lost.

How lost?

"It's like starting back all over again from, like, Pop Warner," Figurs said. "You're in the meeting room learning the new stuff, and when you go to the field, you just try to remember what you learned and learn on the run."

Figurs is part of a wide receiving corps that returns three of its top four yardage leaders from a season ago in junior Jordy Nelson (669 yards), senior Jermaine Moreira (485 yards) and Figurs (243 yards).

But with the offensive switch, everyone is back to square one, Figurs said.

"Right now, it (experience) is really not a big factor because everybody is learning, so it's like starting back over," Figurs said. "But when we get it (the offense), with experience on the field, it's pretty nice - to have somebody that has been there already. Learning this stuff, everybody is on the same grade."

However, in the middle of K-State's second week of spring practice, the offense has Nelson's approval.

"This is an offense that's run in the NFL a lot, and you always hear about the big-time receivers in the NFL," Nelson said. "We're hoping that it will fit us right. I think it's good for every position."

Figurs said K-State's new offense creates a lot of opportunities to make plays as a wide receiver.

"You're always open, and there's always a way out of a play," Figurs said.

Prince singled out Nelson and Figurs as two players who have caught his eye during the offseason and into the spring, not only from an on-the-field perspective, but also as leaders.

"I'm very pleased with Jordy and Yamon. I'm not surprised by that," he said. "I say that because of the way they worked in the offseason. In the winter, these guys were up front and vocal and visible and clear leaders."

PRINCE PLEASED WITH PRACTICES SO FAR

Prince said Wednesday that at this point of spring practice, he is happy with the way his players have responded in practice.

"The number of situations that we're giving them - down and distance, field position, a lot of end-of-the-game situations on offense, defense and special teams - we're building the foundation of where we want to be," Prince said. "Right now, it's just trying to really build a base on the team on how to play the game. I couldn't be happier with what's going on. We're at that point right now where we have a lot in."

Prince could not say how much of the playbook has been installed, saying it is depends on how much the players remember.

"That'll depend on how much they can retain as we keep going," he said. "This is the first 15 days of training camp. The way we've approached it, you'll have some conclusions by the (end of the) spring, but those players who are playing behind obvious starters ... you've got to coach the roster at all levels. We have to be committed to doing that."

ROW | Former rower helps break record

Former K-State rower Grace Riekenberg helped pull her Oxford crew to a record-breaking finish against Cambridge on April 1.

Riekenberg

The Oxford Blue boat finished half a length ahead of its rival to become the first women's crew ever to break the six-minute barrier at the Henley Boat Races. Oxford also shattered the best time for the 2,000-meter course by 17 seconds with a final time of 5 minutes, 44 seconds.

CFB | Saturday's open practice changes

K-State football coach Ron Prince announced today that the start time for the Wildcats' open practice now will be at noon on April 8 at Snyder Family Stadium.

Prince also noted that the change in start time will affect only K-State's April 8 workout and that the Wildcats' final open Saturday practice on April 15 will begin at its previously scheduled time of 2 p.m.

LAC | Duke coach resigns; season cancelled

DURHAM, N.C. — Duke University's lacrosse coach resigned Wednesday and the school canceled the rest of the season amid a burgeoning scandal involving allegations that three players raped a stripper at an off-campus party.

Pressler

Mike Pressler spent 16 seasons at Duke and won three Atlantic Coast Conference championships. Last year, his team appeared in the national championship game.

The rape allegations have roiled the campus and the city, raised racial tensions and heightened the long-standing antagonism between the privileged students at the elite university and the poorer people of Durham.

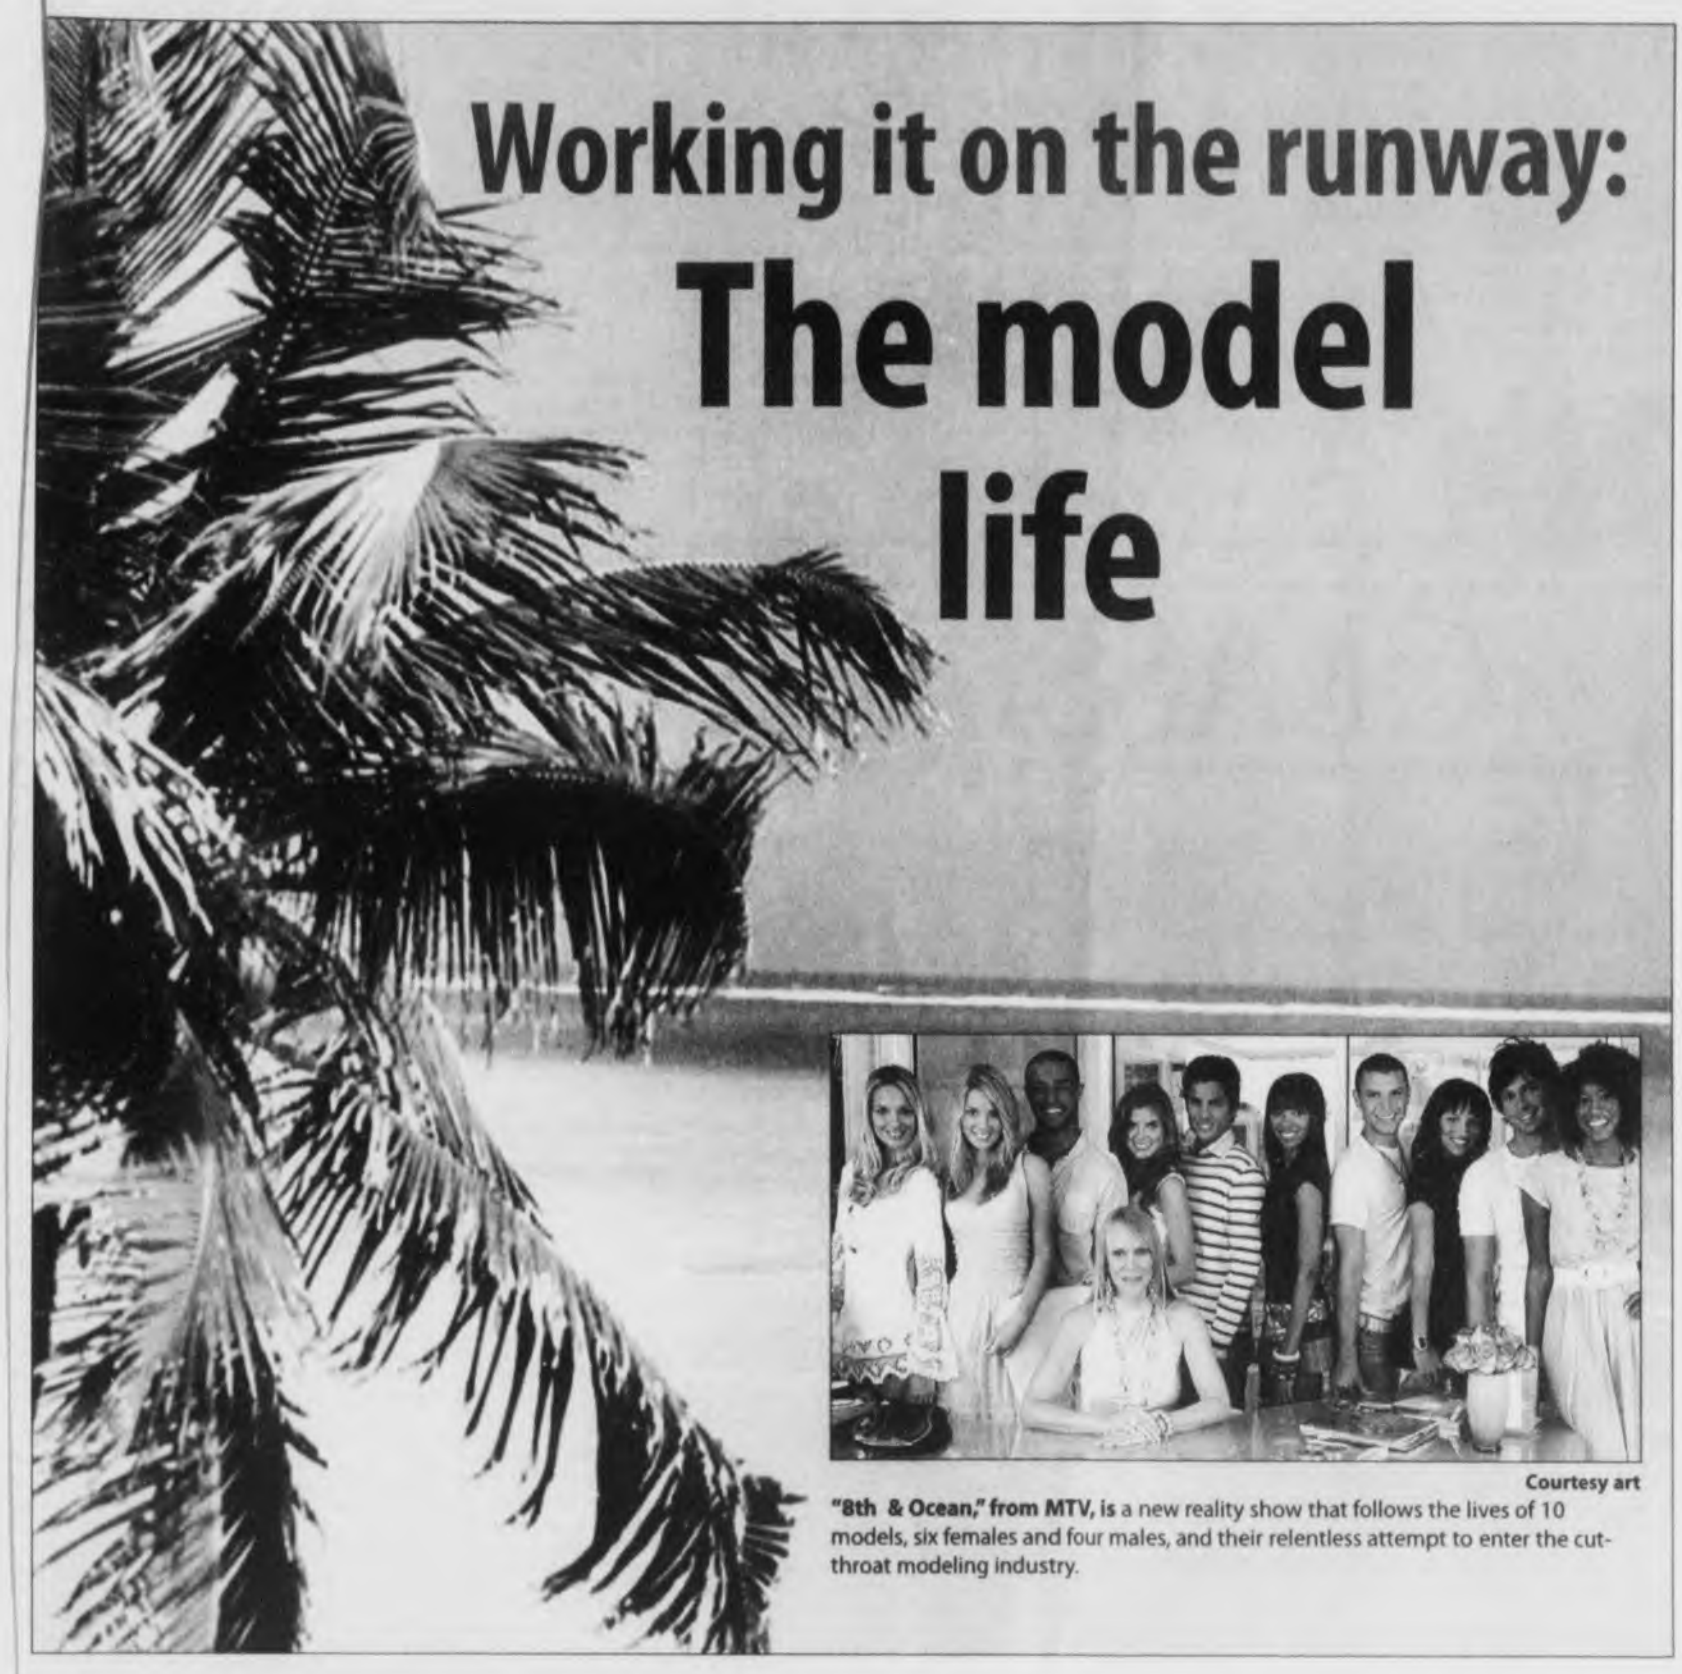
PGA | Augusta altered, Masters starts today

AUGUSTA, Ga. — One by one, players trudged up the hill leading to the clubhouse at Augusta National, then paused and gazed back at a course that by now they should know all too well.

But this Masters seems to contain more mystery than ever.

Part of that is the sheer length. The tees were pushed back on six holes, stretching the course to 7,445 yards, the second-longest course in major championship history behind Whistling Straits (7,514 yards) two years ago at the PGA Championship.

The first tee time is 7 a.m. Central Time.



SPT | K.C. sports officials turn attention to roof

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Officials favoring a rolling roof concept in Kansas City said Wednesday the plan could still be on track.

Moments after Jackson County voters decided to support a sales tax that will raise $425 million to overhaul Kauffman and Arrowhead stadiums — and narrowly defeated a tax to raise money for a proposed roof — Chiefs Vice-Chairman Jack Steadman already was thinking about the next step.

Chiefs owner Lamar Hunt and Royals owner David Glass have both expressed interest in revisiting the $200 million rolling roof plan.

"8th & Ocean," from MTV, is a new reality show that follows the lives of 10 models, six females and four males, and their relentless attempt to enter the cut-throat modeling industry.

'8th and Ocean' follows 10 Miami models, attracts viewers with drama

"8th and Ocean"
TV show review by Eileen Laux

MTV's new reality show "8th and Ocean" follows the lives of 10 up-and-coming models with the prestigious Irene Marie agency in Miami as they try to make it in the modeling business.

As with Laguna Beach, there is a handful of characters that draw you in and make you addicted to the drama.

The characters all play into the drama – some more than others. Sabrina and Kelly, the twins, frequently have a real sibling rivalry going on, and it is taking an emotional and mental toll on Sabrina, who just wants to do the "twin thing." In Tuesday's episode, Kelly, who has been booking more jobs lately, decided she needed to get breast enhancements. This, of course, led to more tears and breaking of the sisterly bond the two share.

Britt wants to keep her good Midwestern girl image, but she is beginning to open up to the high-fashion and sexy world of modeling. She has said, "Jesus is my husband," and I think it is great that she stands by her morals and is true to herself.

Most of the other characters haven't really been in the spotlight. Vinci can't call in at 9:30 a.m. because he is anxious about calling, and this keeps him up. He is arrogant and thinks that since he is so hot on the market, everyone will cater to him.

Teddy wants Britt, but he just can't seem to keep his tongue out of other women's mouths, and she finally called their "almost" date off. I am waiting on the edge of my seat to see if the two will get together.

People have said that most reality shows like "Laguna Beach" and "8th and Ocean" are staged, but even if they are, I still tune in every Tuesday at 9 p.m.

I don't really know what draws me in, but this is one reality show I hope will stay on for a while. I always have enjoyed the unbelievable antics in the modeling world as portrayed in reality TV.

It all began with "America's Next Top Model," but, unfortunately, I don't get UPN, so "8th and Ocean" was a welcome substitute.

No, the show might not be Emmy material, but it is my guilty pleasure. Most of the criticism I have seen said the show is "unintelligent and fake." Maybe it is, but what is reality TV, really? There is no law that says it is always true.

And I am not the only one, because ratings have been good. Hopefully there will be many more seasons to come. True, the whining and crying can get to be a little much at times, but it sure makes for good TV. "8th and Ocean" airs at 9 p.m. Tuesdays on MTV.

Characters

- Britt, the home-schooled devout Christian from the Kansas City area
- Sabrina and Kelly, who always are having twin drama
- Adrian, the smooth wannabe actor
- Briana, the calm, wise one
- Sean, the wing-man with all the advice
- Talesha, the ambitious one
- Teddy, the player
- Tracie, the chef and the pro
- Vinci, the Puerto Rican who can't make it on time anywhere.

Mixing the best of both worlds: alcohol, food

LONI WOOLERY

Now that mother nature has decided to warm up to the idea of spring, there are plenty of meal opportunities worthy of the grill. This chicken marinade offers a great chance to mix the best of two worlds – alcohol and food.

This one will take a little extra planning to execute properly, but the effort is well worth it.

Margarita grilled chicken works well with a side salad, grilled asparagus and potatoes with onions.

Any brand of margarita mix will work, depending on your taste preferences. This chicken also can work with your own margarita recipe.

Although the recipe doesn't call for it, I suggest making a pitcher full of margaritas to go along with meal.

Loni Woolery is a senior in mass communications. You can e-mail her at edge@spub.ksu.edu.

Margarita Grilled Chicken

Prep Time: 15 minutes
Cook Time: 15 minutes
Ready In: 4 hours 30 minutes
Servings: 8

INGREDIENTS:
3 pounds boneless, skinless chicken breast halves or small chicken
2 cups bottled margarita mix

DIRECTIONS:
Pour the margarita mix into a large re-sealable plastic bag. Add the chicken breasts and press out as much of the air as possible before sealing. Marinate 4 - 8 hours in the refrigerator.
Preheat an outdoor grill on medium-high heat. Lightly oil the grill grate. Remove chicken from marinade and discard the marinade. Grill chicken 8 minutes per side or until juices run clear.

Un-happily ever after for Eminem, again

Mathers

It seems the relationship between Eminem, Marshall Mathers, and his wife, Kim, has soured once again. The pair filed for divorce only three months after they remarried.

A spokesperson for Eminem's label, Interscope Records, confirmed Wednesday that the Detroit rapper has filed papers with the Macomb County, Michigan, clerk's office and will seek a divorce from Kim Mathers, his high school sweetheart and the mother of his 10-year-old daughter, Hailie Jade Scott Mathers.

Eminem, Marshall Mathers, and Kim Mathers remarried in a ceremony held on January 14. The nuptials were exchanged only a month after the couple announced they'd reconciled.

The Mathers were first married back on June 14, 1999, but the marriage dissolved in October 2001 amid a bitter legal fight, largely over the custody of their child.

BASEBALL | Early lead allows younger players time

Tapia went 3-for-6 on the evening, recording six RBIs and three runs scored, and he said he is starting to perform at a high level at just the right time – the Wildcats are heading into a three-game weekend series with defending national champion the Texas Longhorns.

"I had seen the guy once and kind of knew what he was going to bring. I just tried to put a good swing on the two-strike pitch and luckily, it went over the fence," Tapia said. "It's a good time to get hot coming into the meat of the Big 12. A lot of the guys besides me played well tonight, and I am confident, not only in myself, but the rest of the guys are also swinging pretty well."

Every Wildcat starter reached base at least once, and the starters contributed to 14 of the 16 runs scored.

Coach Brad Hill began replacing his starters in the fourth inning after Tapia hit his grand slam, and most of the starters had made their way to the bench by the end of the game.

Hill said it was important to get his younger players game experience, and it will be especially beneficial if any of them are called upon during the weekend series with the No. 9 Longhorns.

"We had an opportunity to get some young guys in there, and we tried to get everybody a little taste of it tonight," Hill said. "It's hard to develop a team if you only play a number of people, so it was real good to be able to get some young guys in there, particularly the ones who haven't played as much on the weekends, and hopefully that will help us out against Texas this weekend."

BENNETT | Huggins adds Martin, Hill as coaches

Huggins," Morgan said, "and when he accepted the job, Jason and his family felt that it would be a good idea to come visit."

Huggins' impressive coaching history and knack for improving even the top high school recruits is one of the main reasons Bennett wants to play for Huggins, Morgan said.

"Coach Huggins has been very successful. He did an excellent job at Cincinnati," Morgan said. "He is one of two or three coaches who can make (Bennett) better. It's his dream to play in the NBA."

After listening to one of Huggins' press conferences, it seems the coach might have the same vested interest in Bennett, or a player of his nature.

"There's a lack of size (at K-State)," Huggins said in a press conference. "It's nice to have somebody that can change shots and make up for some defensive lapses and be able to score close."

Still, despite the chatter and Huggins' relationship with Bennett, there is no certainty in regard to the center's future with K-State. He visited Auburn on March 14. He also planned to make trips to Michigan and Alabama, Morgan said Tuesday.

"I don't think it (K-State) is his No. 1 choice," Morgan said. "K-State's in his top two or three, so we'll see how it goes."

ADDITIONAL NOTES

Coach Huggins announced the hiring of assistant coaches Frank Martin and Dalor Hill to his K-State staff.

Martin, who has 2 years on his coaching résumé, comes to K-State from Cinnati, where he was part of Hgins' coaching staff for one yr and coach Andy Kennedy's se following year. Martin lped lead Cincinnati to twpost-season tournaments, inding one berth in the NCAAournament under Huggins. fore Cincinnati, Martin was assistant coach at Northeam.

Hill comes from Chatte, N.C., his alma mater, wh he served as assistant coa for Bobby Lutz for three seons. During his tenure at Chatte, the Bobcats notched an ogall 61-30 record, including ree post-season appearanceswo of which were in the NA Tournament.

workshops is offering additional compensation to students who attend, Burns said.

"The issue is that the funding doesn't become available until the next tuition plan," he said. "It is our hope that (the provost's office) will create a task force to implement the program and hopefully have it by fall 2007."

Burns and Groene met at a state National FFA Organization conference for district officers in Manhattan during their junior year in high school.

"The following summer we went to another officer group for FFA, and over the next year-and-a-half we saw each other on a regular basis," said Groene, who is from Winfield, Kan. "We became great friends and were elected state officers in FFA prior to our freshman year of college."

Burns, who is from Jetmore, Kan., said he'd always considered the possibility of running for student body president.

"It was important for me to find someone I trusted and considered a good friend," Burns said. "It was an easy fit to consider Grant, since he has got all of those qualities."

Burns and Groene announced their bid for the presidency on Feb. 10, 2005.

They defeated Tyson Moore and Matt Wagner on March 9, 2005, with 3,228 votes.

Burns and Groene were sworn into office on April 14, 2005, and Moore was elected as Senate chair on April 21, 2005.

Moore said Burns and Groene have served as leaders for students and their rights.

"Their passion for K-State has absolutely amazed me," said Moore, who also served on the tuition ad-hoc committee.

Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said Burns and Groene were one of the best presidential pairs in recent times.

Krause worked with the pair in the elimination of transcript, graduation and CES fees.

"Grant and Michael have really accomplished all the goals they set out to," Krause said. "In the previous years working with students in that position, I'd really have to put them at the top."

In addition to serving the K-State student body, Burns also met several world leaders during his term, including former Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and President George W. Bush.

"It was a tremendous honor to represent the student body and welcome those leaders," Burns said. "Meeting Gorbachev and Bush are two memories that I will hold forever in my mind as a piece of this experience."

Both Burns and Groene have K-State on their minds for the future.

Burns said he will graduate in May with a degree in agricultural economics. He said he plans to attend graduate school in the fall at K-State.

Groene said he will graduate in December with a degree in agronomy and also is looking to attend graduate school at K-State.

Burns said he has mixed emotions about the end of his term.

"I walk away knowing student government is in the best place it's been in many years," Burns said. "I am going to miss the people – from administration to Student Senate interns.

"Everyone works so hard to make K-State a better place, and I am definitely going to miss being a part of that."

or a student activity center, we would need that."

Grant Groene, chair of the bond surplus fund committee, said while the proposal requested $1.5 million, the committee decided to give them $1 million.

"We were looking at the other proposals and decided they needed some funding, too," Groene said. "And they will need additional money, but we thought they could come up with the additional $500,000 from other sources."

Groene said it was a matter of time before the Union was granted funding for fire safety.

"We figured that type of money was appropriate to be given to that type of project and thought it was more appropriate to be given instead of raising privilege fees," Groene said.

Groene said he was not sure when work on the Union fire suppression system would begin.

"This will be useful for many years to come, and when you handle so many students a day this is something that is important," Groene said.

Matt King, bond surplus fund committee member, said the parking garage was one additional reason for accepting the proposal.

"Things are moving very quickly with the parking garage, and in order to have the garage added, it just needs to be upgraded," he said.

King said the proposal also was approved because it made financial sense.

"For about a million dollars we can update the sprinkler system and a couple of the other minor fire safety features, and this needs to be done because everything in the Union is worth a lot more than $1 million," King said.

"And in case of a fire this will reduce the amount of money in general that will occur in damages because it's going to put out a fire and protect certain areas."

K-State Student Union

- Funded through student privilege fees
- Open 112 hours a week
- Would cost $40 million to replace the entire Union
- Union experienced fires once in the 1970s and twice in 1980s
- Estimated daily customer traffic of 15,000-17,000 per day, Monday through Friday

how Saudi Arabia has changed without losing its faith.

"Our nation is taking off, and we are reaching out to the world around us," he said.

Al-Faisal said Saudi students at K-State and other schools around the United States and the world are ambassadors for Saudi Arabia.

"They will be out there, explaining the details of the heritage of which I speak," he said.

Latefa Alsanie, graduate student in manufacturing systems engineering, is from Saudi Arabia and said she was excited to see Al-Faisal.

Hala Al-Jishi, University of Kansas student, said she came from Lawrence with 45 other students to hear the speech.

She said she hopes to speak with Al-Faisal about scholarship and salary matters.

The Saudi Arabian Embassy provides students with a monthly allowance of $1,200, and Al-Jishi said she hoped to have that raised to $1,500.

SpringDance 2006 features variety of styles, choreography by students

By Mark Sibilla
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Every semester the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance presents a formal dance concert in which dance students showcase a variety of dance styles to K-State students and the community.

SpringDance 2006 will occur at 8 p.m. April 7-8 in McCain Auditorium.

This year's SpringDance will contain 13 original pieces choreographed by department of Dance faculty members, students and a guest artist. Of the 13 dances, two are student-choreographed, one is by the faculty guest artist, Alan Arnett from Shenandoah University, and the remainder are faculty-choreographed specifically for this year's dance, Neil Dunn, SpringDance production coordinator, said.

The concert will consist of a variety of dance styles including modern, jazz, classical, ballet, tap and international, Dunn said.

"Those who attend will see a wide variety of (dance) styles," Dunn, instructor of speech, theater and dance, said. "There's something for everyone; it really is a diverse concert."

SpringDance also will contain a variety of musical styles to which the performers will dance, Dunn said. Both old and new types of music, including classical symphonic music and popular rock, will be incorporated into the concert. For example, one piece is set to the music of Beethoven, while another will include a selection of classic rock, he said.

"One of the songs is even an original composition for this concert," Dunn said.

SpringDance has been a work-in-progress since auditions in January, Amanda Slead, senior in dance, said. This is Slead's eighth and final dance production at K-State.

She said anyone with interest or experience in dance can audition for SpringDance. Once the cast has been chosen, rehearsals begin.

"SpringDance is a culmination of all our hard work and dedication we have had this semester," Slead said. "It is an entertaining cultural event for the entire Manhattan community. It is a chance for us to show off what we've done all year."

Slead is one of the students who has choreographed a work for this year's SpringDance. Her performance includes seven dancers, many of whom are graduating seniors in dance.

Her piece is called "Lift," and it is set to classical music by Beethoven.

"I attempted to create an opposition between the music and the dance," Slead said. "The dancing is very fast and harsh; I'd say almost dangerous, because it includes a lot of lifts and throws. It is a sharp contrast to the music, which is what I was trying to create."

Gabby Hunter is also a graduating senior in dance who also will perform her final formal dance concert at K-State. This is her sixth production.

Officer assaulted by 2 men

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Two Junction City men were arrested Wednesday on charges relating to an attempted burglary from a vehicle, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

Taurian Williams and Bobby Holloway were arrested by Riley County Police after police were called about a vehicle burglary in progress at 704 Summit St.

"We got a call about suspect males looking into cars," Quintanar said.

When an RCPD officer arrived, he interviewed a suspect.

A call came over the police radio about an attempt to locate a black male with a tan shirt and baggy blue jeans who possibly was armed with a gun, Quintanar said.

The description matched Williams, and when the officer attempted to perform a search, Williams resisted. A struggle between Williams and Officer Les Newey ensued, and Newey of the RCPD called for backup.

Williams was taken into custody, as was Holloway, who arrived during the struggle.

Williams was charged with vehicle burglary, aggravated intimidation of a witness or victim, obstruction of the legal process, battery on a law enforcement officer, and possession of stolen property.

Holloway was charged with burglary and possession of stolen property.

Recovered was a compact disc face plate worth $75 and a K-State ID card.

A BB gun also was recovered from Williams, Quintanar said.

The aggravated intimidation of a witness charge was a result of the alleged victim confronting Williams, Quintanar said.

Newey received minor injuries to his left hand and right knee, Quintanar said.

Bond for Holloway was set at $5,000, and Williams' bond was set at $20,000.

New president, senators sworn in after final action on three issues

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former Student Body President Michael Burns offered Student Senate a piece of advice in his closing speech Thursday night.

"I offer you all this one challenge: no matter who is elected or who was elected to be a part of this next Student Senate term, you must be accepting of them and give them trust," Burns said.

It was the final meeting for 2005-06 Senate and the first meeting for 2006-07 Senate term.

Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy, along with newly elected senators, were sworn in by Tyson Moore, Senate chair.

Nominations then were made for the new Senate chair: Nick Levendofsky, College of Agriculture senator; Ashley Boldt, College of Human Ecology senator; and Joe Vossen; College of Arts and Sciences senator. Senate will vote for the new chair at next week's meeting.

During a four-hour meeting, the 2005-06 Senate took final action on the following pieces of legislation:

REGULATIONS CONCERNING OPEN PERIODS

A resolution defining open periods during Senate meetings passed with unanimous consent.

Each regular meeting of Senate begins with an open period, and any person without speaking privileges can address Senate. Individuals will be allowed 10 minutes unless extended by a majority vote.

According to the resolution, those with speaking privileges can ask questions for no more than five minutes unless extended by a majority vote after an open speaker concludes a presentation.

Each speaker will be limited to five minutes unless extended by a majority vote at the end of a regular Senate meeting.

"This clarifies a lot of the issues brought up with the first and second open period," Brandon Sager, Senate Operations Committee chair, said.

STATUTES AMENDMENTS CONCERNING THE ELECTIONS REGULATIONS

A bill supporting the revisions to elections regulations passed with a vote of 46-0-0. Changes include a new section for the limitation on dissemination of campaign materials.

"These are the necessary changes that I and the Senate Operations Committee believe will lead to more efficient elections next year," Elections Commissioner Tanner Banion said.

FISCAL YEAR 2006 ALLOCATION TO ORDINARY WOMEN

After more than one hour of positive and negative debate, a bill allocating $845 to Ordinary Women for its Take Back the Night event passed with a vote of 31-14-0.

Bush OK'd leak

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Vice President Dick Cheney's former top aide told prosecutors President Bush authorized the leak of sensitive intelligence information about Iraq, according to court papers filed by prosecutors in the CIA leak case. Before his indictment, I. Lewis Libby testified to the grand jury investigating the Valerie Plame leak that Cheney told him to pass on the information, and it was Bush who authorized the leak, the court papers say.

Immigration deal nears

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Senate Republicans and Democrats closed in on a last-minute compromise Thursday on legislation opening the way to legal status and eventual citizenship for many of the 11 million immigrants living in the United States illegally. Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., said he had been assured President Bush supports the measure.

Lent teaches discipline, sacrifice

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The 40 days between the Christian holidays of Ash Wednesday and Easter, commonly known as Lent, are often a source of curiosity for those who don't participate. After all, it isn't often a person willingly gives up their favorite food or pastime for more than a month.

For those who do take part in Lent, however, it can be an opportunity to learn more about their faith.

Brian Dieker, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, said although he is not a practicing Catholic, he chose to participate in Lent.

"It's just a little sacrifice to kind of know where your priorities are," Dieker said.

This year Lent began on Wednesday, March 1, and will last until Sunday, April 16.

Dieker said this year he gave up candy and soda.

"I know it's like a fourth-grader type thing to give up," he said. "All the big things most people give up are the kinds of things you shouldn't be doing anyway, so it's pointless for them to give it up only to take it up again after 40 days. I'd drink like three bottles of soda a day, and eat a candy bar a day, so it definitely affects my daily routine."

Dieker said so far he hasn't had much trouble avoiding his favorite snacks, but he has had a slip-up.

"We were at the coffee shop, and my brother ordered a Jones soda – and you don't really think about that being a soda, it comes in a glass bottle and looks fancier," he said. "So I took a swig, and then I felt really bad, because those are the only things I gave up."

According to catholicism.about.com, giving something up for Lent isn't mandatory and is an exercise that is meant to strengthen the spirit.

Dieker's girlfriend, Alissa Millard, said she appreciates what he is doing, although sometimes she forgets about what Dieker chose to give up.

"At first, I would forget and offer him candy or a pop a lot," Millard, junior in open-option, said. "But I've gotten better about it."

Dieker said he has learned more about going without the comforts that one takes for granted, as well as other ways those around him have chosen to celebrate Lent.

"Some people, rather than giving something up for Lent, have gone in the other direction and decided to give more time to their religion, like praying or reading the Bible, instead of just giving up something stupid like me," he said. "I think that's a better use of your abilities."

Fr. Keith Weber of St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, said even though some students might seem to be giving up something trivial, or out of habit as opposed to deep spiritual desire, it doesn't mean they aren't gaining something from the experience.

"I think any act that we do, even if we aren't completely for the right reason, even if we're just partially for the right reason, you still get something out of it," Weber said.

Dieker said he the practice of giving up something for Lent has been a positive one.

"I think it's a good experience," he said. "It's good to experience that sacrifice, especially for all Christians, and not just Catholics."

Senior art students show work after months of preparation

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The works of four K-State seniors in fine arts can be viewed for free from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. April 10-14 in the Mark A. Chapman Gallery in Willard Hall.

The four student artists featured in the first exhibit are Meredith Moore, painting; Kyle Whitley, sculpture; Ryan McCandless, drawing; and Allison Ezell, ceramics.

Whitley said he has been working on his pieces for the past year and a half.

"This is the show I do to graduate, so I've always had it in the back of my head," Whitley said.

As of now, he has 10 pieces but said he can take some out depending on how strong they are.

"I enjoy the whole aspect of expressing yourself through a three-dimensional form," Whitley said. "I have a newer piece that a lot of people haven't seen that I really like called 'Constraint.'"

Whitley also stressed that visitors to the gallery should feel free to sign the guestbook.

Moore said she will have more than 20 paintings at the show.

"I chose these works either for their general quality, or because they represent an integral part of my main concept, or thesis, if you will," Moore said.

She said there are three pieces she particularly enjoys.

"I also look forward to people seeing some of my more recent, playful work," Moore said. "In my paintings, I like to only show half of a story. I know what's going to happen to the characters next. I am excited to see what other people might imagine is going on in the story setting of my recent work. I have long enjoyed the element of mystery in other artists' works. I suppose I enjoy it in my own work, too."

Moore said she will go on to do masters coursework in art history.

Teresa Schmidt, professor of art, said she is very excited about the show and the gallery.

"It's a great gallery," Schmidt said. "The walls move, we have spotlights and more, and we have Mark Chapman to thank for that. Before this gallery, the faculty had just made one in Willard hall. I know the students really appreciate the chance to use this amazing gallery."

Schmidt said the faculty is there to advise and help the students.

"The students choose a major professor who helps them choose which works to include in the exhibit," Schmidt said. "Usually it's someone they've been working with the most."

Schmidt pointed out that the students get the final say.

"All of our students are very talented," Schmidt said.

There will be BFA exhibits in the Chapman Gallery every week until the end of school. Groups of three, four and five will present the works they have done throughout their K-State careers.

TO THE POINT

SGA members must remember their promises

A transition of power took place Thursday night as Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy were sworn in as student body president and vice president, respectively. The college senators also were sworn in.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The first major decision SGA focused on was nominating candidates for the 2006-07 Student Senate Chair. Recognized as the third most influential member of SGA, this is an important decision.

The Student Senate Chair is responsible for appointing and removing committee chairs and the student senators in the committees. Among other responsibilities, it's also their duty to verify and sign all passed legislation and to present it to the student body within eight days.

With so many changes occurring in SGA, it's important that they don't overlook this position. Members should understand it's time to get down to business. The hard work begins next Thursday with the selection of the Student Senate Chair.

While senators and cabinet members are preparing for this task, they also need to remember the promises they made during their campaigns. There were plenty of other students running for most positions and willing to do as much work as it takes.

Ultimately, the members of SGA are our voice and should work hard to fulfill their goals. Those elected should follow through with their campaign promises and do what is best for K-State and its students.

Admitting addiction

Cell phones have rapidly taken over the world

MEGAN MOLITOR

Since my parents farmed, I received my farmer's permit when I was 14 and was allowed to drive the 15 miles to my high school every day.

However, I was, and still am, an absolutely horrid driver, and my parents feared for both my and my fellow road-mates' lives.

So they installed a tired, old bag phone in my car.

For those of you who don't know what a bag phone is – and I don't blame you – it was an oversized cell phone that fit into a holder in a bag, similar to a regular house phone.

I felt fantastically special.

I was instructed that, as goes for most fun things that parents give children only to tempt them, it was for "emergencies only" and was not to be used for anything my parents deemed frivolous. That pretty much scratched out everything for which I wanted to use it.

This was my first encounter with a cell phone.

Time marched on, and I convinced them it was imperative that I have a "normal" phone, to whip out at random moments and display my coolness.

With my phone now constantly in my pocket, I noticed that, as time went on, it became more and more attached to my ear.

A few years later, my problem, perhaps my sickness, has only grown worse.

My entire life is installed inside that three-inch contraption.

Important numbers, not-so-important numbers that I don't remember getting, schedules, my alarm clock, pictures, etc. – I fear I will never marry, as I don't see how any male will ever complete me the way my cell phone does.

A few months ago, without going into extreme detail, I managed to flush my phone down a toilet one evening.

As this was a Saturday night, I was forced to wait until Monday to go to my dealer and purchase a new one. That, by the way, was one of the more difficult things I've ever had to explain.

I thought my life would end in that day-and-a-half. Like someone who loses his leg and still feels pain in it – I still felt my flushed away phone vibrating in my pocket. This is when I knew I had a problem.

I'm not alone. It terrifies me that the human race has become so dependent on a device with a built-in tip calculator that stops working in low valleys. As I walk on campus, I see every third person is either on their phone or gazing at it confusedly as if it holds life's greatest answers.

Perhaps it does. Perhaps, someday, when I reach the pearly gates and I ask God what the meaning of life was, he'll stare at me as though I'm insane and say, "Why Megan, why didn't you just ask your cell phone?"

I'm not saying it will change, nor do I want it to. I'm OK with my attachment to my phone, and I think acceptance is important. However, if society's obsession with cell phones has reached this point of no return, I can only wonder what will happen next.

A portable microwave for tasty Hot Pockets during class? Hmm, something to ponder.

Attitudes can change our physical reality

CODY HOLUB

Early one night last weekend, I ran into a person that I often see out and she asked me how I was doing. I responded out of habit, "I'm doing okay."

Immediately I noticed that I responded to her question reflexively. I didn't even think about my thoughts and general being.

This realization occurred instantaneously, so I deliberately added to my just finished response, "But I'm on the way to excellent."

Right after I said it, I felt mysteriously good – I couldn't help but smile uncontrollably.

One way or another, I had a great rest of the night. I wondered if it was just coincidence, or if I actually brought that perspective onto myself. After a little research, I may have found out.

In the book, The Art of Happiness, a psychiatrist draws upon his multiple experiences and interviews with the Dalai Lama. He tells of a time when the Lama (as I so informally call him) was having a conversation with some doctors at a university medical school during one of his lecture tours.

The doctors were talking about the brain and stated thoughts and feelings were the result of different chemical reactions and changes in the brain. The Lama humbly proposed a question to them. He asked, "Is it possible to conceive the reverse sequence, where the thought gives rise to the sequence of chemical events in the brain?"

One of the scientists responded rigidly, without thinking or reflecting, "We start from the premise that all thoughts are products or functions of chemical reactions in the brain."

The doctor hardly challenged his habitual way of thinking.

So, which comes first, the thought or the chemical? An experiment that is displayed in my all-time favorite movie, "What the Bleep Do We Know!?" may hold the answer to this question.

Dr. Masaru Emoto conducted an experiment that focused on water, and what can affect it. He set up a series of studies and photographed the molecular structure of water with a dark-field microscope after applying various mental, not physical, stimuli.

He photographed water from the Fujiwara Dam before it was subjected to any stimuli – it looked just like a blob with no coherent pattern. Then, the same water was photographed again after receiving a blessing from a Zen Buddhist monk. This time the photograph showed a beautifully intricate pattern resembling a snowflake.

In a similar study, he wrote down simple phrases on paper and taped them to bottles of distilled water and left them out overnight. Bottles that contained phrases like "Thank you" and "Chi of Love" once again produced extravagantly symmetrical designs.

The bottle that had the phrase, "You make me sick, I will kill you" produced different results entirely. That picture showed a chaotic, incomplete and incoherent asymmetrical relationship.

Now some people may not think the experiment is very significant, but I think it is a fascinating concept considering that more than three-quarters of our bodies are water.

So, if thoughts alone can have those kinds of effects on water by itself, what can our thoughts do to us?

Fundraiser benefits Hale

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Thousands of books, compact discs and DVDs will go on sale tomorrow to benefit Hale Library.

The 17th Annual Friends of the K-State Libraries book sale will begin Saturday at 9 a.m. and run through Wednesday afternoon.

Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean at Hale Library, said all of the materials sold at the annual book sale are donations from the K-State and Manhattan communities.

Books of all types and subjects are donated, McCulloh said, including textbooks, literary classics, mystery novels and children's books.

"The sale is perfect for people who want to add a little more to their libraries or just do some leisure reading," she said.

Prices will be marked on each item, and McCulloh said students would be pleased to see how low they are. Hardback books and textbooks will sell at $4 a piece, while paperback and fiction books will be priced between 50 cents and $1.50.

Despite the low prices, McCulloh said the sale is a great fundraiser for Hale Library.

"We usually sell between 10,000 and 12,000 books each year and raise about $10,000," she said.

Friends of the K-State Libraries allocates book sale proceeds to a different project every year, said Nancy Raleigh, the group's book sale publicity chair.

"Every year, using proceeds from the book sale and other fundraising efforts, a substantial project benefiting the library is undertaken by the Friends," she said. "It might be contributing to help fund the purchase of a special collection or the purchase of something else that wouldn't be acquired without funding from the Friends."

The group's past projects have included remodeling two library catering kitchens to better accommodate group meetings, and the purchase and refurbishing of a grand piano for use in special concerts.

Melissa Heiman, senior in family studies and human services, said she supported the book sale's goal of enhancing the Hale Library book collection and facilities.

"It's a good way to support the library that would also be beneficial to students," she said.

Heiman said she would be interested in looking at the sale's selection of textbooks.

"It would be nice if I could use them next semester," she said.

McCulloh said her favorite part of the annual book sale was watching a browsing customer come across a book they did not expect to find.

"Professors will come in and say, 'I loaned this book to a student and never got it back,'" she said. "Or some people find books that they read, or their parents read to them, as a child. They walk in empty-handed, and walk out with a bag load."

Public library sale proceeds go to Friends of the Library

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Books at low prices can be found this weekend on the second floor auditorium in the Manhattan Public Library, 629 Poyntz Ave.

Gina Swenson, library administrative secretary, said many books in a variety of genres are available for purchase, including biographies, fiction, mysteries, cookbooks and children's books.

"There's all kinds of books," she said.

"I don't think I can list all of the stuff we have."

Swenson said making the first night only for members is a way to let those supporting the library an opportunity to get first choice of books.

The book sale is the largest fundraiser the Friends of the Library Association does for the library. Swenson said the money from the fundraiser is often used to fund children's and Christmas programs and necessities for the library, including tables and chairs.

Most of the books can be purchased for 75 cents and $1.25.

"Anyone who love books loves to get a bargain," she said.

"They're all in good condition, so it's definitely worth the money.

Abby Riblett, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education, said she is constantly looking for book sales and places to get inexpensive books.

"I'm an avid reader," she said.

"I'm trying to build a library for my classroom, so I end up getting a lot of children's books."

Riblett said book sales are often her downfall.

"Forget the shoes, forget the clothes," she said. "I spend money on books."

Carole Chelz, public relations coordinator for the Friends of the Library Association, said the fundraiser is often planned on the same weekend as K-State's All-University Open House to bring more people out to visit the library.

"It brings a lot of people to the library who don't normally get here," she said. "When they see 'book sale,' they come."

Chelz said the group has been having the book sale since 1986, and anyone looking for bargain books should attend.

"They're always looking for the treasures," Chelz said. "They're always out on the hunt."

Donated items help community

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Junior League of the Flint Hills will have its 15th annual Next-to-New Sale this weekend at Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park.

The event will have next-to-new items donated by the group's members and merchandise donated by local businesses, said Stephanie Gillman, co-chair of the sale.

Gillman said the items donated include men's, women's and children's clothing; household and baked goods; furniture; toys; sporting goods and books.

The Junior League of the Flint Hills is an organization of local women who promote volunteerism, developing the potential of women and improving communities through the effective action and leadership of trained volunteers, Gillman said.

All proceeds from the sale benefit literacy programs in the Riley and Geary counties area, Gillman said.

Sharyl Munson, co-chair of the sale, said that last year's sale brought in more than $6,000.

"We were thrilled with that amount last year, and we would love to top it this year," Munson said.

She said planning for the event begins right after the sale from the year before, with reserving Pottorf Hall and contacting the people that help.

"It depends on the business for how many donations they're able to make, but we've had really good luck with all the donations that we've gotten from the businesses," she said.

Susan Weiser, president of the Junior League of the Flint Hills, said the fundraiser is one of the two main fundraisers the group does.

"The more people that come and buy all of our treasures, the more we can contribute to the community," Weiser said.

Kern returns to home state for ASU Invitational

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Senior Ben Kern said he enjoys having a crowd watch him play in golf tournaments, and this Saturday and Sunday when K-State participates in the ASU Thunderbird Invitational at Arizona State University in Tempe, Ariz., Kern will have more people than usual supporting him in his quest for his first individual championship of the season.

Kern
SENIOR

Kern's hometown of Tucson, Ariz., is about 100 miles away from the 7,025-yard, par-71 ASU Karsten Course, and his parents, aunt, uncle and girlfriend's family will make the trip to come watch him play.

"I expect to play a little better than usual because it's kind of home-field advantage for me," Kern said. "I'll have plenty of support there, which is good because I love having people watching me, and I know they enjoy watching me play well."

Kern's parents attended the last tournament he played – which was in the Stevinson Ranch Invitational in Stevinson, Calif. – where Kern finished in third place in the rain-shortened event.

Kern said he will use the confidence and momentum gained from that event to buoy his performance in Arizona.

The field this weekend is comprised of four of the top 25 teams ranked in the Golfweek/Sagarin Rankings.

Defending champion, No. 7 UNLV, the host school, No. 9 Arizona State, No. 21 Texas Tech and No. 22 San Diego State are all teams the Wildcats will face this weekend.

Coach Tim Norris said he understands the strength of the field in Arizona, but he also knows his team has the ability to card low scores and hang with the high-caliber teams.

"I think the guys are looking forward to the challenge of going up against one of the strongest fields we have seen all year," Norris said. "It is going to be a pretty good challenge for them, and we'll see how they stack up with some of the top teams in the country."

Fellow senior Tyler Cummins, sophomore Kyle Yonke and freshmen Robert Streb and Joe Kinney will join Kern in his home state for this weekend's tournament.

This lineup has been used by Norris five times this season, and has accounted for the top two 54-hole team scores versus par, as it shot an even-par 852 on Sept. 24-25 at the Wolverine Intercollegiate and a 15-under at the Barona Collegiate Cup, Oct. 24-25.

Kinney has never been to Arizona, and said he is excited about the opportunity of playing in a region of the country unfamiliar to him. He also said the team is ready to break out with a special performance and compete with top-25 teams.

"I don't know what holds us back from playing to our potential," Kinney said. "I guess not everyone has put up a good week at the same time, which is why we haven't been able to win a tournament.

"I definitely know, without a doubt, that if we all play to our potential, we will absolutely be able to compete with the best teams in the nation. I have a good feeling about this week, and that's all I'm going to say."

NFL | Former K-State kicker signs with Patriots

Free-agent kicker Martin Gramatica, who was out of the league entirely in 2005 and hasn't attempted a field goal since November 2004, was signed by the New England Patriots on Thursday as a possible replacement for the departed Adam Vinatieri.

Gramatica

Gramatica, 30, has been plagued by injuries the last two years but is said to be healthy again, and the Pats are hopeful he can return to his prior form. For his career, Gramatica has converted 137-of-179 field-goal attempts and all but two of his 183 extra-point tries for 592 points.

PGA | Singh leads Masters

The Masters had a familiar look Thursday, starting with Vijay Singh atop the leaderboard.

The former Masters champion fired off three straight birdies on the back nine for a 5-under 67, his best start in this tournament and a round he felt was long overdue.

Royals need a miracle this season

MARK POTTER

Major League Baseball's tagline for the 2003 All-Star Game was "This time it counts."

For motivational purposes, maybe the Kansas City Royals should adopt a similar slogan this season.

But the Royals obviously will need more help than a catchy saying if they hope to make the 2006 playoffs. They'll need a small miracle.

Truth is, any motto would probably suffice, as long as the team improves a bit. I'm not sure if even die-hard Royals fans will be able to stomach a third-consecutive 100-loss season.

If the Royals don't improve, fans will grow less and less interested. It's as simple as that.

Of course, Kansas City already has started to lose a significant amount of its fan base. Just look at Kauffman Stadium's attendance decline throughout the last three seasons.

- 2003 average attendance: 22,819 fans (No. 22 out of 30 Major League teams).
- 2004 average attendance: 21,031 fans (No. 28 out of 30 teams).
- 2005 average attendance: 17,356 fans (No. 29 out of 30 teams).

Perhaps a more eye-opening statistic was the announced attendance of 11,265 at the Royals' most recent game against the Detroit Tigers on Wednesday.

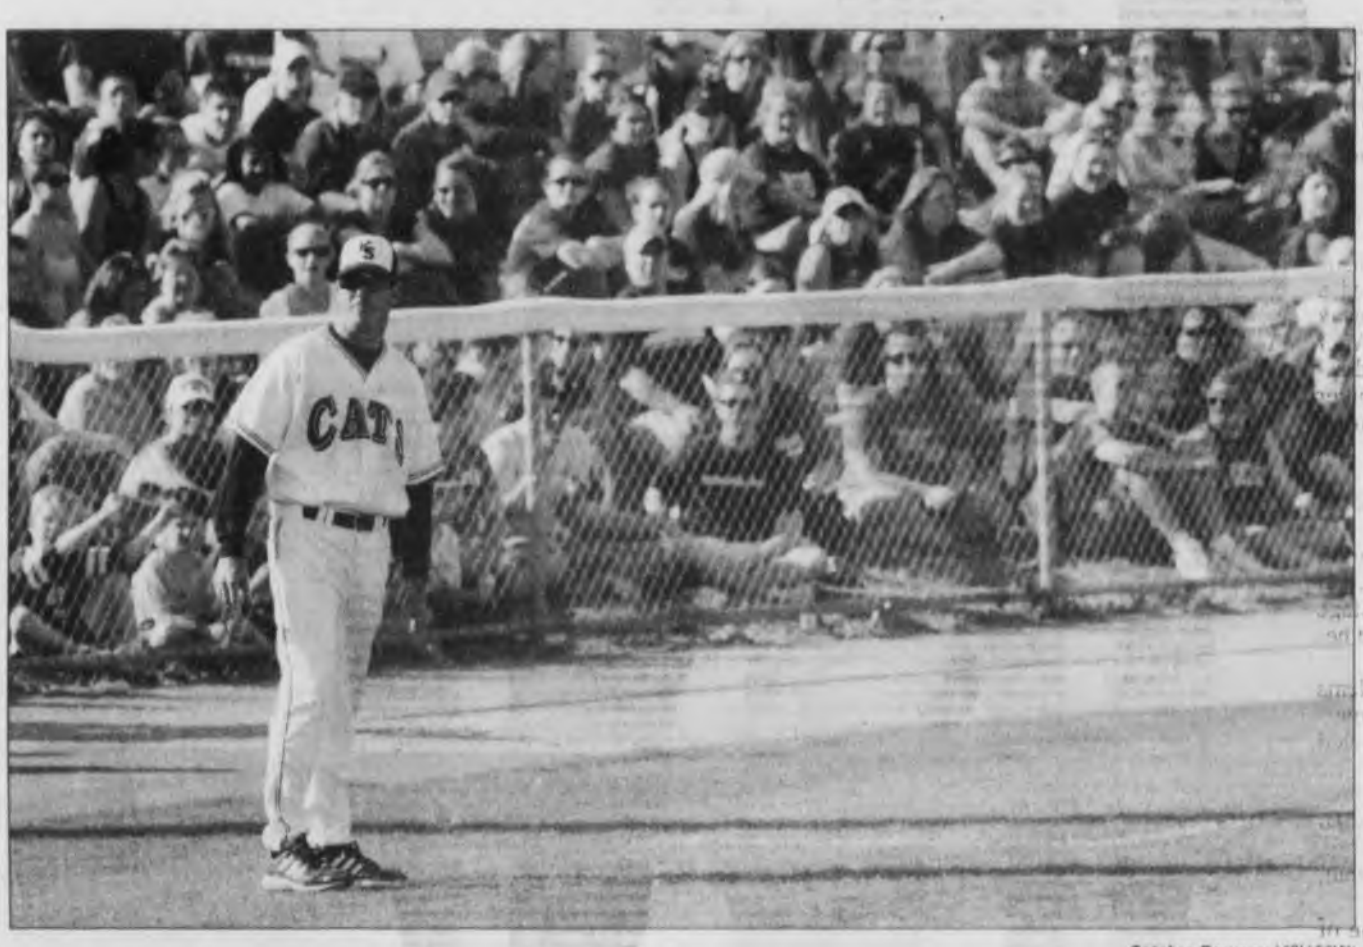
Kauffman Stadium holds about 41,000 people, which means Wednesday's game was only 28 percent full – particularly embarrassing, considering it was only Kansas City's second game of the season.

The low turnout indicates Royals fans lack confidence in their team and the Royals organization.

Completely understandable.

After all, for the last two seasons, the Royals have been downright awful. The evidence – a combined record of 114-210 in 2004-05, including a franchise-record 106 losses last season.

And by signing players like pitchers Joe Mays and Scott Elarton in the off-season, the Royals' front office did little to restore hope in the Kansas City faithful.



You don't need to be a genius to figure out the Royals won't win many games with their current lineup, which features injury-prone has-beens and up-and-coming never-will-bes.

The pitching staff is nothing to brag about either, especially now that starting pitchers Mark Redman, Zack Greinke and Runelvys Hernandez – arguably Kansas City's three best starters – and closer Mike MacDougal began the season on the disabled list.

Kansas City's best off-season move? Getting rid of starting pitchers Brian Anderson and Jose Lima. Remember, Lima posted a 6.99 earned run average last season, an all-time high for

Wildcats excited to play another top-10 team at home

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

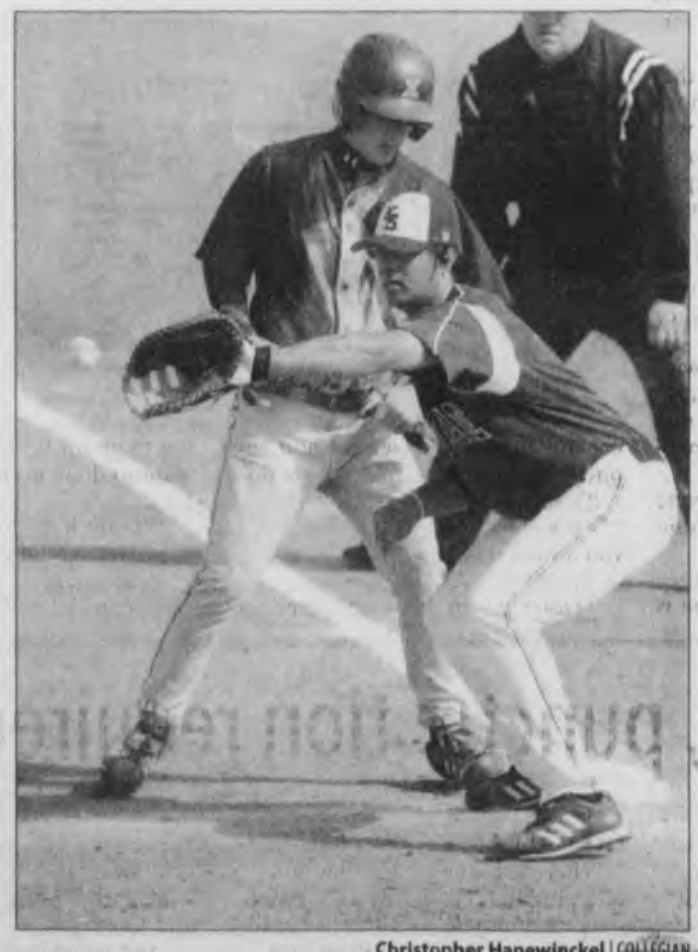
K-State will face another top-10 opponent this weekend when the defending national champion Texas Longhorns come to Manhattan for a three-game series, which opens at 6:30 tonight at Tointon Family Stadium.

The Longhorns (21-11, 6-2 Big 12 Conference) enter the series having won 12 of their last 15 games and are ranked No. 9 in the Collegiate Baseball Poll, but coach Brad Hill said he doesn't think his team is too concerned about Texas' status.

"I think we're excited to play," Hill said. "This is another good opportunity for us, against one of the top teams in the conference, and we're playing at home, and I think we're excited for that opportunity."

K-State had an impressive 16-3 win against NAIA opponent Newman on Wednesday, during which sophomore Cris Tapia had a career-high six RBIs and his first career grand slam.

K-State enters the series against Texas with a 21-5 overall record, and a 2-4 record in the Big 12, after dropping last weekend's series against No. 3 Nebraska 1-2.



Hill said the team learned after the Nebraska series what it takes to earn wins against a top-ranked team.

"It's being able to play through real adversity. Last

Tennis gears up for last home match of season

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This weekend's home matches hold a special meaning.

Saturday and Sunday will be the last time senior Jessica Simosa competes as a Wildcat.

"I am excited," Simosa said. "I think I have had some good years here."

Simosa has come a long way in her four years at K-State, coach Steve Bietau said.

"Jessica has had a great career," Bietau said. "She has been through all of the highs and the lows of the last four years, and she was part of what was arguably the best team in the history of our program."

The reality of a Wildcat team without Simosa has already begun to sink in, sophomore Olga Klimova said.

"She was the most experienced one here, so we will miss her," Klimova said. "Next year, it will be time for someone else to step up and lead the team like Jessica was doing."

K-State will need plenty of stepping up at noon on Saturday against No. 8 Baylor (17-3, 6-0 Big 12 Conference).

"They obviously present a big challenge for us," Bietau said. "They are not only one of the elite teams in the conference, but they are one of the elite teams nationally."

The test is one the Wildcats will welcome, Simosa said.

"When you play teams that are better than you, you begin to play better too, because if you don't, then they basically run over you," Simosa said.

The Bears' roster includes five players ranked in the top-120 individuals in the country. Zuzana Zemenova, the No. 4 player in the nation and a 2005 All-American, leads the all-star lineup.

After the Bears, the Cats face Missouri (6-7, 0-7 Big 12) at noon on Sunday. The Tigers are winless in Big 12 play, but should not be overlooked, freshman Katerina Kudlackova said.

"I know that they have two new girls, so they are not the same team as they were before," Kudlackova said.

K-State might be without the services of their No. 1 player, sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia, after she sustained an ankle injury in warmups April 2 before K-State's match against Oklahoma.

"She is not 100 percent, and we know that," Bietau said. "Right now, it's a question that we don't know how to answer."

Manhattan couple eliminated after six episodes on 'The Amazing Race'

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Manhattan's Lori Willems and Dave Spiker's run on "The Amazing Race" ended Tuesday night.

After six episodes on the reality TV show, the couple finished in seventh place when they were the last to check in at the elimination point in Italy.

While on the elimination mat, Willems said she was proud of how they ran.

"It's disappointing to be leaving the Race, but we ran a great Race," she said. "We did the best that we could. You can't ask for anything more. We enjoyed every minute of it."

The couple was having problems early in the episode, according to CBS' Web site. They were caught in traffic and fell behind on their way to Catalina, Sicily. They had to count statue heads at an amphitheater before heading to a Detour.

Their Detour options were carrying two 32-pound swordfish or selling triglia, a small Sicilian fish. After the Detour, the teams faced a Roadblock: playing a game of kayak polo, a popular Italian sport. After they scored one goal, they would receive their next clue. Although Spiker completed the Roadblock, they lost a foot race with another team, Ray and Yolanda, to finish in last place.

The idea to try out for the show came from Willems, Spiker said.

"She was an avid fan and I started watching it with her," she said. "It was her idea. We put some footage together and sent it in and, lo and behold, we got picked."

Spiker said neither he nor Willems had traveled a lot prior to the show.

"The most that we have traveled was within the United States," he said. "She's been to London once and when I was really young, I visited a friend from Belgium."

The interview process, Spiker said, was a long process.

"The first round, you pick one of nine major cities and you meet with CBS for a 20-minute interview," he said. "We got called back from there for a week and a half of interviews in Los Angeles. Each time it was narrowed down."

There were 50,000 couples that sent in an application for the show, Spiker said. The second round was eliminated to 1,000 couples, then 35 in the third round. Eleven couples went on the show, and there were two alternates.

Willems said the best part of the show for her were the relationships with the other teams that they formed.

"The friendships that we won with the other teams was the best part," she said. "We had a bond that no one else has. There were incredible people that we got to meet."

Willems said her advice to anyone wishing to apply is don't be afraid that you won't get picked.

"The worst-case scenario is they don't pick you," she said. "Anyone is capable of running the race and anyone is capable of winning. I say do it – it's the chance of a lifetime.

"It's a wonderful experience that you'll miss if you don't go for it."

Spiker agreed with Willems.

"Don't let anything convince you not to go for it," he said. "If you truly want to do it, do it. It was so worth it for us.

"If you have any interest whatsoever, you should try out."

Spiker said he was glad he ran the race with Willems.

"[I] already got the prize doing the Race with someone I love dearly," he said. "I love Lori with all my heart, and you can't buy that with a million dollars. Hopefully, this adventure will launch our adventure in life together."

Grammar, punctuation required in online writing

TRAVIS HUDSON

Growing up I was always told to mind my Ps and Qs. This was fine and dandy, and I generally did, but today this saying is taking on a whole new meaning.

I want to urge everyone to mind their own Ps and Qs.

With my new definition, P will stand for punctuation and Q will stand for ... uh, I'm not sure, but I'll figure out a Q-word sooner or later.

The topic at hand is online etiquette – specifically communication. Your typing style, grammar and punctuation all have an effect on how you are perceived and how you carry yourself as an individual.

I've been trying to figure out why the modern-age college student has difficulty conducting themselves online in a proper and respectable fashion.

This is going to be my fool-proof method on becoming a better and more respected person, online.

There are many different situations where these steps could be applied; for example, e-mailing a professor is completely different from instant messaging a friend, but regardless, try to apply these steps in all situations just to get yourself accustomed to proper online etiquette.

STEP 1: CAPITALIZATION

There are some select methods of typing that can easily be viewed as annoying and hard to read. First example: TYPING IN ALL CAPS.

I don't exactly know the reason why this is done, but if you have ever tried to read a large amount of text all in caps, it is difficult; it feels like getting yelled at while reading.

Next example, no matter how cool you seem to think you are, typing in aLtErNaTiNg CaPs is one of the worst faux pas of online etiquette. Most people understand that this method is bad when e-mailing their professors or colleagues, yet they continue to fill up every instant message with it or have an entire Facebook profile filled with alternating caps.

Lastly, capitalize the beginning of your sentences.

Type every single sentence, no matter if it is Facebook, instant message, e-mail, etc., as if you were writing an essay for a class. Capitalization visually separates sentences to make bodies of text flow and read easier.

STEP 2: FONTS

Drop the strange-looking fonts – period. While Times New Roman might get a little old and dull, there is a reason that it is one of the most widely used fonts. It reads nicely and looks good.

And while on the topic of fonts, drop the colors. One of the worst aspects of instant messaging programs is the ability to change your text and background color, and the person on the other end of the message has no control over this.

I would suggest always using black, but if you are going to be one of those ambitious types, avoid any bright colors or any kind of reds.

STEP 3: PUNCTUATE

It is as easy as that – just punctuate. Commas, periods, quotations, exclamation marks, question marks, dashes; they are all terrific in their very own way, so use them.

They like being used, and people enjoy reading blocks of text that contain them. So make everyone happy and punctuate.

But don't punctuate too hard. I'm talking exclamation points and question marks, specifically. Yes, you may be really excited about something, but there is no need to add 15 exclamation points at the end of the sentence. Using one does the same job.

STEP 4: SPELL CHECK

This is a must-do in almost all situations. Nobody is perfect; everyone misspells. The biggest problem with spelling is it is a common mistake directly related to intelligence level. There is even a spell-checker built into Webmail that most people bypass.

While we are on the topic of spelling, we will mosey on over to the topic of usage. Its and it's; their, there and they're; your and you're. These are examples of common types of usage that are butchered nonstop. I guess it is OK to forget how to use these; they were learned in elementary school, and that was a long time ago, but now is a good time to re-learn how to use them.

Also in this topic of spelling comes unnecessary abbreviations. The straw that breaks my back is the abbreviation "ur" for your or you're. Some other bad abbreviations are the one-lettered ones such as b, u, 4, i, c, etc. Yes, phonetically all of these letters sound like words, but that is no excuse to type them that way.

Follow these steps in all of your daily typing experiences, whether it be e-mailing, instant messaging, Facebooking or even text messaging, and you will be on your way to becoming a better person all around.

Great combination of comedy, horror genres

UNIVERSAL PICTURES

"Slither"
Movie review by Brendan Praeger

The horror genre has recently been flooded with unoriginal remakes and terrible Asian imports, so it's refreshing to see a film that succeeds by not taking itself too seriously.

While most horror films grow stale after finding out who the killer is, comedies have a longer shelf life.

Director James Gunn took the same direction with "Slither." He combines enough humor, plot and cheesy special effects to make it the most entertaining horror movie since "Shaun of the Dead."

The plot revolves around a small rural town where the cops are always bored and the first day of deer season is more important than Christmas. When a meteor lands in the forest, an ancient alien begins possessing civilians and devouring pets.

The main villain is a possessed human, played by Michael Rooker (Mallrats). He transforms into a creature that the locals describe as a "squid," and begins kidnapping women and stealing farm animals. The police unsuccessfully attempt to stop him, and the disease spreads.

The special effects are disgusting, but everything is so unrealistic that it shouldn't bother those with a weak stomach.

In the end, "Slither" plays like an R-rated Goosebumps book. It's not really scary, but it's interesting and enjoyable enough to warrant a viewing from fans of the genre.

The guide to finding a dazzling diamond

Diamond nomenclature
Light enters the diamond, reflects, comes back to the top and finally refracts out of the top. This is what makes the diamond sparkle.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cut, color, clarity and carat – the four Cs of diamond classification. These categories determine the price and value of the diamond.

Matt Shull, senior in psychology and manager of Zales at Manhattan Town Center, said all four categories are equally important.

"Carat sometimes matters a lot to some people, but a very large diamond can have a very poor quality," he said.

He said most people see the cut as just the shape of the diamond, but it is more based on the proportions. For example, the cut is what makes a diamond sparkle, so a poorly cut diamond will shine through the bottom and might not sparkle effectively.

Shull said the color scale is based on the alphabet, excluding A, B and C. He said people should look for a diamond that is closer to the top of the alphabet. He said something like Jennifer Lopez's former pink diamond engagement ring might not be bad, but is very rare.

Shull said clarity is how clean the diamond is and may have internal inclusions that are naturally made.

"These freckles, as we like to call them, are something that have been in your diamond for the 3.4 billion years that it may have been around," he said. "They are just different, not bad."

A diamond that is completely clear or flawless is difficult to find and extremely expensive.

Jennifer Rome, junior in social work and sales associate at Riddle's Jewelry at Manhattan Town Center, said the number of inclusions in the diamond can vary from called feathering, a small cracking that resembles a feather, to carbon spots, which are small, black spots.

She said the ranges of clarity indicate how easy it is to see the flaws with a 10 power microscope. With flawless and internally flawless classifications, there are no inclusions at all.

Shull said the carat is the size of the diamond. The carat is rated on a 100-point scale. Thus, a 1/2 carat has 50 points.

The best combination of all four categories depends on the particular interest of the person, Shull said. The price usually is determined by the rating of the four categories.

"If you have a diamond that has high ratings on two of the Cs that can contribute to a price jump," he said. "If three of the Cs are high then the person may need to save up."

Rome agreed that all four categories are equally important. She said the average clarity is i1 and colors are H, I, J and K. Riddle's uses the Gemology Institute of America ratings.

Shull said it varies by person on how much he or she spends on the engagement ring. He said even though size can matter, it is better to have a smaller diamond with a higher quality.

"My understanding is that you should spend the first two months of the first-year job salary on the engagement ring," he said.

"I use the four Cs with our customers, but ultimately the choice varies with the couple," he said.

Rome agreed that the choice rests in the couple's preferences.

"I would personally choose quality over quantity," she said. "The true colors, such as canary yellow, are more expensive, but are more rare. It all depends on what's more important to you."

Shull said some popular trends now are the paza, an antique-looking diamond, and the emerald cut.

A popular trend among the younger generation is a white gold band, which matches nicely with a diamond, Rome said. A princess cut is popular among younger students, and colorless diamonds are the most common in color.

"The trends seem to stick with the more traditional styles," she said. "Anything too rare is usually out of a college student's budget."

She said the price of a college students' ring is usually $1,500 to $2,000, and the size is a 1/2 carat, but these can vary depending on the person.

Megan Beam, senior in English education, became engaged to her fiancé, Weston Steiner, senior in secondary education, in February. They went ring shopping last summer and are getting married on July 29.

"I really liked the princess cut because it is very clean cut," she said. "I got a white gold band for the same reason and because it matches the yellow undertones of my skin."

She said students should look for something that is in their budget now, and they can upgrade later. For example some companies will let you put the bigger center stone in later.

"I looked for clarity over the size," she said. "Which is a good thing for students to look for. It doesn't always depend on the carat."

Undergarments play vital role on wedding day

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When planning a wedding, one of the first things that often comes to mind is the wedding dress.

Soon-to-be brides flock to bridal shops to pick and prod, looking for "the dress." But what many don't consider or realize is what the bride wears under her gown can be just as important as the gown itself.

"Brides spend thousands of dollars on a wedding gown but then usually don't stop and think about how important their undergarments are," said Teresa Purvis, sales associate for Patricia's Undercover Lingerie. "These brides need to have a proper foundation garment that will give them an attractive silhouette."

Catrina Rawson | COLLEGIAN

If brides don't invest in proper foundation garments, they could be sorry later, Purvis said.

"Just think how horrible it would be to get your wedding pictures back and to see a stomach poking out and to just not have a nice silhouette," Purvis said. "Those pictures will last forever, and you'd just be kicking yourself."

Patricia Yeager, owner of Patricia's Undercover Lingerie, said brides should get the dress, then the undergarments, and then worry about alterations.

"If you get your dress altered not wearing the foundation garments you intend to wear at your wedding, then you may end up having a dress that is too tight or wont fit right," Yeager said.

Yeager defines foundation garments as control items that can keep a bride from wiggling where she doesn't want to wiggle. They also enhance, reduce or minimize certain parts of the body.

Brides should consider the shapes of their bridesmaids before purchasing their dresses, because some gowns don't flatter certain body types, and foundation garments cannot always fix the problem, Yeager said. One common problem is when a bride selects a back-less gown for a bridesmaid with a large bust.

"It will be so difficult for her to keep that dress up, and there isn't much we can do as far as undergarments that will help that type of situation," Yeager said.

After the ceremony, brides can shift gears and prepare to showcase a different type of undergarments.

Victoria's Secret sales lead, Amanda Ringel, said the type of lingerie she recommends for a bride's wedding night is very dependent on the type of person to whom she is recommending it.

"I usually ask what type of person they are, and then I have them try on different selections so they can get the best fit," Ringel said.

Ringel said some popular items she sells to soon-to-be brides include panty sets with garters or stockings.

Patricia's Undercover Lingerie has a wide selection of lingerie to fit the wants and the bodies of almost all soon-to-be brides.

"We have things that look particularly good on petite people, and we have things that look good on larger girls," Yeager said. "Sexiness has nothing to do with size."

Yeager said she would recommend a chemise with embellishment to someone who is more conservative and something with stockings or thigh-highs and a garter belt for someone less conservative.

It's also important to consider what types of lingerie the groom likes, Purvis said.

"It's good to find that happy medium between what he wants and what you want," she said.

For men, Purvis said she would recommend silk boxers or boxer-briefs.

"This is not just for the bride, and with guys, a little effort goes a long way," Purvis said. "We even have K-State purple for those guys who want to show the school spirit."

Patricia's Undercover offers his/hers sets so the bride and groom can match on their special night. Types include a Tarzan set, a "have a nice day" set and a set with tuxedo bikini underwear for him and thong with a veil for her.

Patricia's Undercover and Victoria's Secret both have bridal registration, so brides can receive the lingerie they want.

"Sometimes when people come in to buy for a bride they just guess and may end up getting something the bride didn't really want," Ringel said. "This way people will get specifically what they are wanting and in the right size."

When a bride comes in to register, Ringel said she measures her for her bra size and figures out the lingerie and panty sizes. Then the bride simply lists items in which she is interested.

With bridal registries and several local lingerie stores, there is no excuse for soon-to-be brides to just wear whatever they have laying around.

"Men will notice what you are wearing, and old underwear is not sexy on anyone," Yeager said.

Matrimonial manners

Respect newlyweds' special day by responding to invite, nixing embarrassing stories, limiting alcohol consumption

CHRISTINA HANSEN

It's that time of year again. No, I'm not talking about spring or March Madness – I'm talking about wedding season.

This is the time of year the invitations begin to pile up in your mailbox, and you fill every weekend on your calendar from April until August.

But as you prepare to attend the weddings of beloved family members and friends, take a few minutes to brush up on your wedding guest etiquette.

First and foremost, when you receive a wedding invitation, never assume that someone not listed on the invitation is invited to the ceremony or reception. If an invitation does not include key phrases such as "family" or "guest," don't bring your family or significant other. Many couples agree on a small guest list to keep wedding costs down, and you should respect their wishes.

After you decide whether or not to attend a wedding, RSVP in a timely manner. Showing up at a ceremony or reception without notifying the bride and groom in advance is not only inconsiderate, it can cause shortages in food and seating. Simply call the bride or groom or drop them an e-mail by the date requested on the invitation, and save them added hassle and expense on their big day.

Another important item of wedding etiquette is to observe the dress code requested for the event.

While a ceremony on the beach or at a chapel in Las Vegas might be an exception to the rule, most weddings are not casual occasions. If the bridal party is clad in evening gowns and tuxedos, you can safely assume that a T-shirt and jeans are not acceptable attire. If the dress code is unclear, walk on the safe side; it is always better to be overdressed than underdressed.

The next item on the list – don't drink too much.

I attended a wedding last year where a guest's obnoxious drunkenness was not only evident to those around him, but it actually disrupted the bride and groom's first dance at the reception. Have some respect for the newlyweds and for yourself. You might think you're the life of the party that night, but you'll also be the one everyone is whispering about the morning after.

Your last duty as a polite and well-mannered wedding guest is to avoid making inappropriate toasts at the reception. No revelations of your best friend's wild past ("We'll miss you at the strip clubs, buddy.") or your sister's string of failed relationships ("Hey, third time is the charm!") Chances are, the bride and groom will not appreciate your sense of humor, nor will their parents, grandparents or brand new in-laws seated nearby. Keep the toast short, sweet and innocuous, and if you ignored the above paragraph on drinking, skip it all together.

Remember, a bride and groom's wedding day is one of the most important events in their lives. If a couple has honored you with an invitation to their big day, practice a courtesy and common sense and help make the day memorable for all of the right reasons.

Program promotes safety

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Women have the opportunity to practice shooting Saturday during the Women's Recreational Shooting Day at Fancy Creek Range in Tuttle Creek State Park.

Daryl Youngman, associate professor at Hale Library, said 25 women have expressed interest in the event.

Youngman helps with the event, since he enjoys teaching about gun safety, said Catharine Youngman, Daryl's wife and library assistant at Hale Library.

This year, the farthest distance someone is traveling to attend is WaKeeney, Kan., he said.

The event is part of Women on Target, from the Women of the National Rifle Association.

Women need to be 16 years old to attend, and Daryl said he has had women as young as 16 to women in their later 70's attend the shooting day. All shooting will be supervised by trained safety officers, he said.

The event is a popular one and takes place two times a year, Daryl said.

"It's intended to be a supportive thing for women," he said. "Ideally, we like to have one in the spring and one in the fall."

Some of the game wardens will cook lunch, and the event also offers daycare for children of the participants

Guns will be provided, but women who wish to bring their own weapon are welcome, Daryl said.

Catharine said she enjoys target shooting with a .22 caliber rifle and shooting clay pigeons.

"I've always much preferred shooting pistols," she said. "That's my favorite part."

Women's Recreational Shooting Day

When: 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday
Where: Fancy Creek Range is located in Fancy Creek State Park, one mile east of U.S. Highway 77 on Kansas Route 16
How much: $15 for one; $20 for two

For more information, contact Daryl Youngman at (785) 313-0718.

DANCE | Annual show contains variations on familiar techniques

Hunter encourages all to attend SpringDance 2006 because there will be something for everyone to enjoy.

"SpringDance contains a lot of familiar dance styles with a different spin," Hunter said.

"There is a variety of music, dancing styles, level of dance technique, and there is even some acting involved, not just dancing. It is enjoyable for everyone young and old."

Both Hunter and Slead said they had fond memories of their dance experiences at K-State and are especially proud of this year's SpringDance.

"I've been so blessed to be in this concert and have so many opportunities in K-State's dance department," Hunter said. "I think that this show year's show is the best show to go out on."

Slead echoed this sentiment.

"We are so lucky to have this space, this stage and such a great cast that is willing to dance," she said. "It's a little sad to know I will be graduating, and this will be my final production at K-State.

"But it is reassuring to know that the experiences I have received here will help me find more opportunities to dance outside of K-State."

TEXAS | Wildcats ranked No. 1 in the Big 12 Conference in hitting

week, on Sunday in particular, we just didn't battle back very well, and they let some things happen in that third inning that really took us out of our game, and we never really recovered from it," he said. "We need to make some quicker adjustments in the game and make some more pressured at-bats from what we did."

The Longhorns are posting a .288 team batting average this season, with Kyle Russell pacing the team with a .345 average, followed by junior Carson Kainer at .342. The Wildcats, on the other hand, are No. 1 in the Big 12 in hitting with a .336 average, led by Big 12-leading senior Joe Roundy's .474. Senior Barrett Rice is second in hitting on the season at .424, and senior Brandon Farr has posted a .444 average in his last nine games.

Tonight, sophomore Brad Hutt – who is 5-0 with a .343 earned-run average – will start on the mound. Hutt said he thinks the Wildcats are capable of performing well in the series if they can maintain a good level of play.

"I feel real confident heading into this weekend," he said. "We've shown that we can play with the elite teams in this league. It's just a matter of playing three games of it, and not just, you know, not one day, and just putting it all together."

ROYALS | Several higher-ups to blame for Kansas City decline

any major league pitcher with at least 30 starts.

So, who is responsible for the Royals' downward spiral? Owner David Glass? General Manager Allard Baird? Manager Buddy Bell? Kansas City's players? Major League Baseball?

Answer – all of the above.

Look, it would be a lot easier if we could blame one person for the Royals' collapse. But doing so would be unfair and illogical.

Since Kansas City is a small-market team, everyone needs to accept some of the responsibility.

The owner needs to raise the payroll. The general manager needs to lure some big-name players to Kansas City. The manager needs to teach his young players how to have a winning mindset. The players need to cut down on mistakes and play with more focus. And Major League Baseball needs to implement some sort of salary cap and/or revenue sharing.

Otherwise, the Royals will fall further from the playoff race each year, and Kansas City fans will stop coming to games altogether.

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Putting aside party differences, Senate Republicans and Democrats coalesced Thursday around compromise legislation that holds out the hope of citizenship to many of the estimated 11 million immigrants living in the United States unlawfully.

"We can no longer afford to delay reform," said Republican Sen. John McCain and Democratic Sen. Edward M. Kennedy in a statement that capped weeks of struggle to find common ground.

But delay soon set in as party leaders became embroiled in a procedural dispute that threatened prospects for passage by week's end, if not longer. Democrats blocked votes on Republican amendments, and Republicans responded by accusing Democrats of trying to scuttle a bill they had embraced earlier in the day.

"I believe there are some people who would rather have no bill," said Sen. Mel Martinez, R-Fla., a Cuban-born first-term senator.

The seesaw nature of events kept with the unpredictable course of the election-year legislation, designed to enhance border security and regulate the flow of future temporary workers as well as affect the lives of illegal immigrants.

President Bush said he was pleased with the announced compromise, and urged the Senate to pass legislation by week's end.

But the emerging compromise drew fire from both ends of the political spectrum. Conservative Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas, likened it to an amnesty bill that cleared Congress in 1986, while AFL-CIO President John Sweeney said it threatened to "drive millions of hardworking immigrants further into the shadows of American society, leaving them vulnerable to exploitation."

Still, after days of partisan, election-year rancor, an breakthrough on the future of illegal immigrants propelled the Senate closer to passage of the most sweeping immigration legislation in two decades.

In an indication of the complicated political forces at work, officials of both parties disagreed about which side had blinked. But they agreed that a decision to reduce the number of future temporary workers allowed into the country had broken a deadlock that threatened as late as Wednesday night to scuttle efforts to pass a bill. The change will limit temporary work permits to 325,000 a year, down from 400,000 in earlier versions of the bill.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., characterized the developments as a "huge breakthrough." Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada said he was optimistic about final passage, but cautioned, "We can't declare victory."

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, said: "While it admittedly is not perfect, the choice we have to make is whether it is better than no bill, and the choice is decisive."

Las Vegas theme encourages fun, festivity on K-State campus strip

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This year's All-University Open House just might get students, visitors and family members all shook up.

All things Las Vegas are the theme of this year's event. Attendees can visit a variety of Sin City's most famous attractions, play games and listen to a roster of headlining musicians without leaving campus.

The theme for open house each year is decided by Pat Bosco, dean of student life, and the University Publications staff.

Shane Shanks, associate director of University Publications, said the theme was chosen because of its popularity in the past.

"There was a Las Vegas theme last year, and it seemed to go over very well," he said. "Students asked to keep it around for another year."

Advertising for the university's open house made references to popular Las Vegas landmarks and traditions.

One poster featured the slogan, "Welcome to Fabulous Open House," accompanied by a picture of a showgirl decked out in K-State's signature purple. Visitors also can visit the open house "strip," made up of 375 campus organizations gathered in the K-State Student Union.

Shanks said a theme is important in order to create a distinctive and appealing open house.

"It mainly tells people who are off-campus that this is this year's event and suggests there are new things to see," he said.

The Nevada city's festive reputation, Shanks said, is a plus for those in individual colleges and departments trying to think up activities to engage visitors of all ages.

"People planning events on campus have something to pin onto," he said. "Las Vegas suggests games and a fun atmosphere."

The Union Program Council is planning an array of activities to entertain open house visitors, said Nacole Boan, senior in political science and vice president of the Union Governing Board.

"We will be sponsoring a dunk tank and live bands on the Bosco Student Plaza, as well as a performance by the Marching Cobras," she said.

Jeff Rupert, junior in sociology, said he thought deciding on a theme for the university-wide open house would be difficult.

"Every college is so different – it'd be hard to tie them all together," he said.

Rupert said an interesting theme, along with effective advertising, could attract many visitors to open house.

"I think it adds something to draw people in," he said.

Open house welcomes visitors

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Families in the community, students from area high schools and college students are invited to participate in the All-University Open House from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday.

The open house is free to everyone, and events will happen on a come-and-go basis for those who wish to attend.

The open house offers activities from colleges and student organizations at K-State, which will provide a look into what those parts of the university do each school year.

In 2004, the open house brought about 20,000 people to the K-State campus. Each year, nearly 2,000 volunteers and a committee of 50 students and faculty help to organize open house.

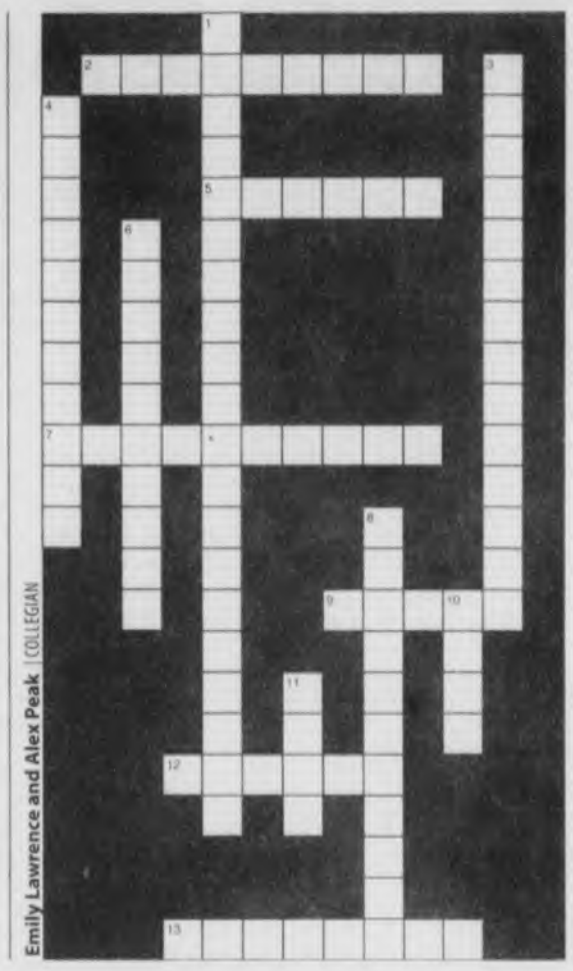
"There are so many events that I'm excited about," said Shea Larson, senior in communication sciences and disorders and open house committee chair. "The atmosphere is awesome and we are going to have some amazing events."

Each college has a different committee that sets up displays and activities for guests that showcase their academics and events throughout the year.

The Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science has a "Gold Brick Award," which is given to the committee from each department that has the best display at the open house.

"Judges evaluate the different displays and parts of each one," said Jessica Wiles, senior in architectural engineering and head of the display for the department. "There are sections for curriculum, freshman-sophomore and other information about our department."

Wiles said the good-natured competition and the opportunity to meet new people is what she likes most.



"This is the first time I've been head of a display," Wiles said. "But what I like most is the fact that you get to meet different people in different years of my curriculum."

The goal of open house is to promote an positive image of K-State.

"The thing that is most beneficial and rewarding is giving back to the K-State community," said Bryce Huschka, senior in industrial engineering and head student coordinator for open house. "We show high schools and our families what we do here on campus."

This is Huschka's fourth year helping with the open house but his first time as head coordinator.

"It's pretty hectic," Huschka said. "We just make sure that everything is running smoothly. We have a lot of new events coming this year, and hopefully everything will go great."

Activities available for everyone this weekend

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free entertainment, information on hundreds of K-State organizations and tours of the university will be available during the All-University Open House from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday.

Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life and coordinator of New Student Services, said open house encompasses a lot of what K-State offers beyond what prospective students see during a normal campus visit.

"There really is something for everyone, and attendees can spend an entire day on campus and still not see everything," Lehning said. "Some of my best memories are of attending open house as a prospective student visiting K-State, as an adviser working with student groups and now as an administrator to help plan aspects of the event. It's a great day."

Lehning said this year will include past favorite activities that are part of the open house tradition and new features.

"A few new features include a performance by the Marching Cobras at noon at the Bosco Plaza," Lehning said. "This drill team brings a lot of energy and excitement to every performance."

The housing exposition on the second floor of the K-State Student Union will feature information about the residence halls, greek life and scholarship houses. Lehning said she hopes having these in the same location this year will be more convenient for the participants.

Prospective students can participate in hands-on activities in each college that showcase K-State students' accomplishments. A list of these activities can be found at www.consider.k-state.edu/openhouse.

Open House Entertainment

- 9-10 a.m. - Bates Dance Studio
- 10-11 a.m. - the Step Show by K-State's multicultural student organizations
- 11 a.m.-noon - Mikey Needleman
- Noon-12:30 p.m. - Marching Cobras
- 1-2 p.m. - E.W.B.
- 2-3 p.m.- K-State Cat Band
- 2:30-3:30 p.m. - Willie's Extreme Egg Hunt

Campus tours leave every half hour from the admissions booth in the Union. Shuttles to residence halls, the K-State University Gardens and the Peters Recreation Complex leave from the south side of the Union every 15 minutes.

Guided tours and activities will be available at Hale Library, the K-State Alumni Center, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art and greek houses.

From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. in the Waters Hall quad, fraternities and sororities will have games and prizes. Also in the quad from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. K-State athletes will sign autographs and meet visitors, who also can participate in an obstacle course.

Special receptions will be in the Union throughout the day parents and families welcome reception in Forum Hall, an out-of-state students and parents reception from noon to 1 p.m. in the Cat's Pause Lounge, a multicultural students and families reception from 10 to 11 a.m. in the Bluemont Room, a transfer students and families reception from noon to 1 p.m. in the Big 12 Room and the military personnel and families hospitality tent west of Bosco Student Plaza are some of these.

The Union Program Council is sponsoring entertainment in Bosco Student Plaza throughout the day.

There will be specials in the stores and food locations in the Union.

Bryce Huschka, senior in industrial engineering and the all-university chair of open house, said that open house is a good opportunity for potential students to see what the K-State has to offer.

"It's good for them to see the school spirit that we have and what the college experience is like at K-State," Huschka said.

He said it is important for K-State students to interact with potential students because recruiting good students is a way of giving back to K-State.

"Anytime you're in a community, it's your duty to give back to it," Huschka said. "That's why the university's good now because of the people that are in it."

Huschka said this day is not just for potential students to see the university.

"It's also a chance to show your families and friends what's going on at K-State," Huschka said.

Shea Larson, senior in communication science and disorders and student life exhibits coordinator for the student core committee for open house, has been involved with this event for three years.

"It's great for prospective students to see what programs are available, and it's great for college students to showcase what they are doing at K-State to prepare for their future," Larson said. "There are things to do for all ages, and the atmosphere for the day is amazing."

Human Ecology organizes hearing tests, workshop

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Human Ecology has planned an array of events including games, workshops, mini-golf and an open-air café for the All-University Open House Saturday.

The events will take place in several locations.

"We will have things taking place on the patio in front of Justin Hall, in the Hoffman Lounge, on all three floors in Justin Hall and in the Campus Creek Complex," said Cara Richardson, special events director for the College of Human Ecology.

According to a pamphlet distributed by the college, there will be an open-air café from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday. Meals will include a free Pepsi and an Old Chicago cookie. The café will be on the patio in front of Justin Hall.

There also will be ice carving demonstrations at 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. on the patio.

Along with the open-air activities, the college will allow people to walk through its speech and hearing equipment rooms in the Campus Creek Complex.

"People will be allowed in certain areas so they can do free tests for certain things, such as hearing," Richardson said.

There are several educational opportunities for human ecology students in the Campus Creek Complex.

"Students are allowed to see clients, so they can get real hands-on experience," Richardson said.

In Justin Hall, there will be separate activities taking place on the first, second and third floors.

"On the first floor they will have an empathy belly, so people can put on the belly and see what it's like to be pregnant," Richardson said.

The second floor will be host to a question-and-answer session with interior design students and a display showing student projects and many of the portfolios and original designs of the future apparel industry.

On the third floor, there will be a historic chair exhibit and an interior design workshop.

"The workshop is targeted for ninth through 11th graders," Melissa Adams, coordinator for the college, said.

Adams said the students will work with interior design majors and staff to produce a conceptual project, designing a commons area for their high school. The students won't do any drafting or highly skilled work, but instead will be encouraged to think abstractly and use magazines and photos to make a collage.

"The high school students will be encouraged to use adjectives to determine what the area will feel like and construct a collage to help them see what it will look like," Adams said.

There will be two free sessions of the seminar. One will take place at 1:30 p.m and the other at 2:30 p.m.

The seminars are free. However, to enroll, people are encouraged to contact Adams through e-mail at mnadams@humec.ksu.edu.

"The workshop is free because we received a Tilford Incentive Grant from the K-State provost office," Adams said.

The objective of the seminar is to encourage more students to recognize the value of an interior design degree.

"Most people are unaware of what you can do with our degree, so we educate them as to what is available."

Scavenger hunt promotes campus tour with prizes

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Agriculture will be a large part of the All-University Open House on Saturday.

Abby White, senior in agriculture journalism and the College of Agriculture's open house coordinator for Ag Ambassadors, said she hopes the "Ag Avenue" theme draws a large crowd.

"We're going to have over 50 activities," White said. "One of the biggest examples is the Little American Royale."

This event is patterned after the American Royal in Kansas City, Mo., and will be put on by the Department of Animal Science and a combination of other clubs like Block and Bridle and Dairy Science. At 10 a.m. in Weber Arena there will be many animals, and anyone can sign up to participate.

"We're also going to have a pancake feed in Seaton Hall on Saturday morning, along with insect races, and Sigma Alpha will be having people make their own Beanie Babies out of soybeans," White said.

Another large part of the festivities will be a scavenger hunt, put on by the Department of Agricultural Education. Clark Harris, assistant professor of secondary education, helped plan the event.

"This is the fifth year we've been doing the scavenger hunt, and it was originally requested we do it to get more people to see more of the ag buildings," Harris said. "The participants will get a stamp at each stop of the journey and in the end will take them to a table in Waters Hall where the first 300 people will receive a free T-shirt."

The hunt will begin at 9 a.m., and participants must get six stamps. Some of the buildings to be visited include Throckmorton, Shellenberger, Bluemont and Waters halls.

"It's all about going to the buildings, taking the tours and seeing the displays," Harris said. "They will see things like the insect zoo, parts of the milling and baking display and the Little American Royale. It just gives people a more broad view of agriculture."

Anita McDiffett, senior administrative assistant with the Department of Grain Science and Industry, said there are more events planned for the day.

"The Feed Science Club will be having equipment demonstrations and an ingredient display in the feed mill," McDiffett said. "The Grain Science Club will be offering flour sales, and the Bakery Science Club will have a bake sale."

"It's all about going to the buildings, taking the tours and seeing the displays. They will see things like the insect zoo, parts of the milling and baking display and the Little American Royale. It just gives people a more broad view of agriculture."

ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF SECONDARY EDUCATION

McDiffett said Extrusion will display a lab-scale extruder, extruded products and a slide show in the feed mill. International Grains Programs and Bio Industrial Value-Added Program will give tours of its building in the Grain Science Complex.

20 business clubs to recruit; college to draw visitors with games

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Business Administration will encourage prospective students and families to "Play your cards right" during Saturday's All-University Open House with activities, games and information.

Ron Jackson, academic adviser in the College of Business Administration, said about 20 business clubs will be set up to share about their majors and projects, while recruiting for their clubs.

"We've established a number of fun games centered around business things," Jackson said. "They can learn about business through the games."

Brittany Bruns, junior in finance, said the college randomly will give free T-shirts away at the door.

Students and families can make their own "Who wants to be a Wildcat?" trading card through the Management Information Systems club.

Several games will be available for families and prospective students to play with current students, including Wheel of Fortune, Jeopardy and Where in the World is Carmen San Diego. Prizes will be available for participants.

Bruns said prospective students can also receive information about different departments from ambassadors and advisors in the college.

"They can play games, but also talk to students," she said.

Because Calvin Hall, the college's main building, is located south of the K-State Student Union, Bruns said people often bypass the college and migrate north.

To encourage people to stop by, she said music will play outside of the building to entice people to stop by Calvin Hall.

Activities and projects by students in the college will also be available for prospective students and families to see.

"Our focus is to show prospective students what students here do," she said. "We're putting a really big emphasis of what students are doing in the college."

Free food lures students

EILEEN LAUX

Let's be honest, K-State's All-University Open House is not the No. 1 thing I want to do this weekend. However, K-State students might want to make an appearance because the benefits could outweigh the inconveniences.

I have gone to the event at the K-State Student Union in the past, and I enjoyed myself. Students have the opportunity to meet new people, get free stuff and gain an overall pride in their school.

Prospective students are the people that get the most out of open house. They have the opportunity to meet representatives of each college in the university and look at the services offered by organizations, like Student Ambassadors or Student Publications.

Clubs are usually the most popular of the booths and are ideal for current or prospective students because they allow students to explore their interests in getting involved with the school.

Open house has something for everyone. There is a children's carnival, and tours are given of the residence halls and campus so family members of students can come to Manhattan and enjoy the events as a family.

Now I am the typical college student, I usually use my weekends to relax and let loose and get ready for the next crazy week. I understand that most current students do not want or feel they need to attend the open house events.

However, these events allow us to show off our university and show the community and visitors our pride in where we get our education.

Campus events might not be on the top of every current student's priority list, but these kinds of things allow us to showcase why our school is one of the best.

For instance, showing a parent where you work everyday or letting the community see a lesser-known aspect of K-State is important for recruitment. This allows people, especially prospective students, to see why our university is one of a kind.

Although this might not be the party of century, open house can provide prospective students with a taste of what K-State is and why they should want to go to school here.

There is an opportunity to meet different departments and clubs to explore alternative ways to get involved. Yes, clubs and organizations might take up your time, but the experience you will get far outweighs the time restraints. College is a time for trying new things and meeting new people, clubs and organizations can help you do just that.

And let's not forget one of the easiest ways to lure college students to an event: free food. A lot of the food is free, with the occasional charge for certain things, but making a quick appearance, seeing what it is all about and maybe snagging some free food couldn't hurt anybody.

So if you are a current or perspective student, make your way over to the Union on Saturday. It just might be worth your while.

Carnival, informal advising headline Education events

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Face-painting and robot contests are a few of the activities planned for Saturday at the College of Education's part in the All-University Open House.

Ashley Nunez, open house chair for the College of Education and junior in elementary education, said attendees can expect a cross between a children's carnival and an informal appointment with an adviser.

"We are offering a lot of hands-on activities for younger people and family," Nunez said. "We also have an ambassadors' booth that has information for prospective students."

Nunez said students thinking about changing their majors can stop by to ask questions about the education major.

"Some education majors don't get to spend a lot of time with the young students, and it's just so much fun to interact with them," Nunez said.

Amanda Preston, student representative for agriculture education and junior in agricultural education, said the agriculture education booth will have a product-matching activity that teaches children the origin of some of their favorite store-bought items.

"You match items like a chicken to an egg or cotton to a T-shirt," Preston said. "We are basically showing that you can't just pick something up from the store."

Preston said she is participating in the open house because she thinks it is important for students to know more about the agriculture majors.

"We need to get the general public to know that agriculture doesn't just deal with farming," Preston said.

Nicole Carlisle, student ambassador for the College of Education and senior in education, will help with the "Wheel of Education" activity in Bluemont Hall.

"Kids can spin a wheel and answer questions about K-State and the College of Education, and then we hand out prizes," Carlisle said.

Bryce Huschka, student coordinator for the open house and senior in industrial engineering, said he encourages current students to attend.

"K-State has given each of us our education so we, as students, should help out," Huschka said.

Fort Riley soldiers, families invited to experience K-State

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's Department of Military Science will offer activities at Saturday's All-University Open House.

Maj. Jim Porter, associate professor of military science, said the department will offer tours of an army adventure van and a 35-foot tall rock climbing wall in front of K-State Student Union.

Porter said the van will feature an M1 Abrams main battle tank simulator, Black Hawk flight helicopter simulator and 9mm pistol simulator.

Fort Riley soldiers and their families were invited to attend this year's open house, something not done in the past, Porter said. He said soldiers are encouraged to attend because they are members of the community.

"We want (Fort Riley soldiers and their families) to come and experience all of the things the university has to offer and to help them understand how to take advantage of educational opportunities at K-State," he said.

April Blackmon, community relations officer at Fort Riley, said the open house is an opportunity for K-State to showcase its offerings to Fort Riley soldiers and their families.

"The army encourages soldiers and family members to continue their education, and being able to actually show them a college campus and the activities that go on is a wonderful opportunity," Blackmon, a 2003 K-State graduate, said.

Brennen Clayton, sophomore in business administration pre-professional, said activities like the Black Hawk simulator and the rock wall will offer insight into military life.

"It's just to kind of see different things you can do in the military," said Clayton, who is in the Army ROTC. "If people have never thought about it, it's just to see what they do and see how difficult it can be."

What K-State has to offer military families

- Only a 15-minute drive from Fort Riley to attend classes.
- Military personnel stationed on active duty in Kansas and their dependents can pay in-state tuition to attend classes.

Parade, opening ceremonies start busy weekend; contest follows

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

From Lego robots to bionic cows, students and faculty members of the College of Engineering have teamed up to create fun and educational exhibits to entertain All-University Open House visitors.

The college's events start at 2:20 p.m. today with the Engineer's Parade. The parade begins on the sidewalk next to Cardwell Hall and ends in Bosco Student Plaza.

Shawn Cowley, sophomore in electrical engineering and member of the Engineering Student Council, said student floats and skits at the end of the route make the parade a fun and popular event.

"People from the community bring their kids to have a good time," he said.

Opening ceremonies will follow, including the arrival of a torch runner and the presentation of the Yellow Brick Award on the steps of Seaton Hall.

The Lego MindStorms design contest for high school students will take place from 4 to 8 p.m. at the Rathbone Hall atrium. Tours of the engineering facilities will be offered, as well as visitors' first chance to view student and industrial displays.

Saturday's events begin at 7 a.m. with a pancake feed sponsored by the American Society of Agricultural Engineers. A bridge design contest for high, school students and a scholars reception will also take place from 9 to 11:30 a.m.

The robotics competition team will conduct a robot tournament from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. in Fielder Hall, as well as an alumni reception at 11 a.m. in Fiedler Library. The events ends with the reservation-only 38th Annual Engineers Open House Awards Banquet in the Union Ballroom.

Students' work and projects will be on display in Durland, Fiedler, Rathbone, Seaton and Ward halls throughout the weekend.

Jeremy Christopher, junior in mechanical engineering, said that all the exhibits, tables and projects take a lot of time and volunteers to set up before open house begins.

"They (teachers) cancel classes on Friday to help with the work because they know that all of the students will be there too," he said.

In past years, student booths have filled almost every corner of available space, Bradley Matlack, junior in mechanical engineering, said.

"The displays show those students what types of projects go on here, and how you can get involved in the engineering program," he said.

Who Are We?

We are a door with no locks that sways open and shut as those who walk through it bring whatever she or he can carry in their hands. We are a familiar face in the lobby, a nostalgic scent on the plaza. We are the rhythm of a drum that is reminiscent of a heart beat. We are the rooms that are filled with laughter, sharp debate, and quiet study. We are the center of activity and the edge of reality. We are the magnet that pulls, we are where the seeds are planted, we are the green light, we are the beginning of the race, we are the finish line.

K-State-Salina to serve breakfast after fly-in

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State-Salina also will have its All-University Open House festivities this weekend, featuring the Wildcat Fly-in, free Call Hall ice cream and several other on-campus attractions.

Kristin Magette, coordinator of public and alumni relations at K-State-Salina, will oversee the basic promotion of the open house. She said this year's attractions during open house are similar to those in past years.

"The fly-in is always popular," Magette said. "We also give away free Call Hall ice cream and balloons and have face painting. The rest of campus just comes alive with a whole lot of different displays."

Wildcat Fly-in has occurred for the past three years.

Pat Rinearson, staff assistant for Salina College Advancement and coordinator of the event, said several airplanes from different parts of the region are invited to land in Salina on Saturday. The pilots, along with the public, can eat a breakfast prepared by the flight team at K-State-Salina. The flight team also helps park the transient planes, he said.

"The flight team is in charge of running the event," Rinearson said. "I just make sure all the needs are met and make sure people will be there."

Robin Mikols, sophomore in the professional pilot program, is the student coordinator for the open house.

"I'm in charge of helping Kristin Magette with activities that day," she said. "I also help clubs on campus to get entertainment."

Mikols said some attractions at the campus center will include a juggler, a car race in the parking lots on campus and other activities across campus.

Magette said open house is a great time for prospective students to visit K-State-Salina.

"It's one of the best opportunities to visit campus because there are a lot of people around," she said. "It becomes as alive as it ever is on campus, and it's a lot of fun for all ages to come out."

Clubs, colleges to give away free items, food as incentives

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Free food and prizes will be available for those visiting K-State's All-University Open House, including hot dogs, soft drinks and a drawing for a pair of football tickets.

Sonia Topliff, administrative assistant to Dean Pat Bosco, said clubs and colleges will offer a lot of free giveaways, including pens, notebooks and other items.

"You can pick up lots of little freebies," she said.

Topliff said another way to see a lot of campus and receive prizes is with the open house passport system.

Open house student coordinator, Bryce Huschka, senior in industrial engineering, said passports can be stamped at 13 different destinations on campus, including all of the university's main college buildings, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, one residence hall and Hale Library.

Huschka said people have to get their passports stamped at six of the 13 destinations to be placed in a drawing for various prizes.

Prizes range from ice cream gift certificates to a $300 book scholarship at Varney's Book Store. Huschka said other big prizes include two chair back seats for one non-conference K-State football game and a football signed by coach Ron Prince.

"I think one of the most important things is to get around to all the different areas," he said. "So much is going on that people might get stuck."

Huschka said having people go to different places would be a way to give them an incentive to come back to K-State.

Huschka said each college also will have other giveaways at their main buildings for those involved or interested in those particular colleges.

Along with prizes, free food will be available.

Huschka said the College of Agriculture will have free cheese testing, and the College of Human Ecology will have hot dogs, soft drinks and snacks.

While free food and prizes will be available, Huschka said open house is an opportunity for students to show their pride at K-State.

"It's more for students at K-State to show off K-State," he said.

Veterinary Medicine to hold petting zoo, animal display

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

About 5,000 people are expected to attend the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine Open House on Saturday.

The college has planned several events for the day's festivities, which will occur between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. in Moser and Trotter halls.

"I think it's great for really young, like 2-year-olds, up to 100-year-olds, really," said Amanda Hafer, third-year student in veterinary medicine and member of the student planning committee. "There's always things to see."

Many of the events the college will have during the All-University Open House are annual favorites, Hafer said.

For example, a petting zoo will be held for younger spectators, as well as a children's pet clinic. Children can bring their stuffed animals to the clinic, and veterinary students will perform physical examinations on them.

The Exotic Animal Club will have a large display set up in Moser Hall, which will include snakes, ferrets, lizards and birds. For a small fee, guests can be photographed with the snake, Hafer said.

Another popular annual event is the walk-through heart exhibit, which explains the different chambers of the human heart and the different types of heart disease.

Booths explaining X-ray technology also will be set up, along with a live flea exhibit and a canine treadmill. A cannulated cow with a hole in its side to provide a view directly into the cow's stomach will be present, Hafer said.

The day will begin with a series of four lectures, including a speaker on canine thunderstorm phobia, a representative from KSDS Inc. on specialty dog services and a zoo ambassador program presented by Sunset Zoological Park.

The theme of biosecurity will be emphasized at this year's event, Hafer said.

The College of Veterinary Medicine will inform people of the importance of washing their hands after petting animals and how to avoid bringing foreign diseases back to the United States when traveling.

Numerous display tables, most of which represent veterinary medicine or other companies that sponsor the day's events, will be available for viewing.

Many of these companies, like Purina and Fort Dodge, contributed funds needed to host this event, said Erin Whitacre, a member of the planning committee and a third-year student in veterinary medicine.

"I feel it's important that they support us, because we allow them to come talk to the students, talk to the public, and most of them are more than willing to help out," Whitacre said.

At this point, the committee has raised $1,000 from outside companies and is expecting more, Whitacre said.

Planning for the open house began last fall, so the committee could get a head start on everything they needed to do, said Lynn Jirovsky, third-year student in veterinary medicine and member of the planning committee.

"We tend to get a bigger crowd than the rest of the school because people are interested in the things we have on display," Jirovsky said.

Architecture, Planning and Design exhibits student work

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Architecture, Planning and Design has a relatively low-key schedule of events planned for the All-University Open House in comparison to some of the other K-State colleges.

"We don't do a lot of fancy, flashy things," said Diane Potts, assistant to the dean of the College of Architecture, Planning and Design.

Potts said the college will have exhibits of student works open to the public from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturday.

"Visitors can come in, walk around and look at the students' work," she said.

According to the K-State Open House Web site, the exhibits featured will include projects from students involved with the American Institute of Architecture Students and Architecture Student Advisory Board, the environmental design program and Environmental Design Student Association, the interior architecture and product design program and Interior Architecture Student Council, the landscape architecture program and student chapter of the American Society of Landscape Architects and the regional and community planning program and Student Planning Association.

Potts said students and faculty will be on hand during the day to answer questions about the college and the exhibits.

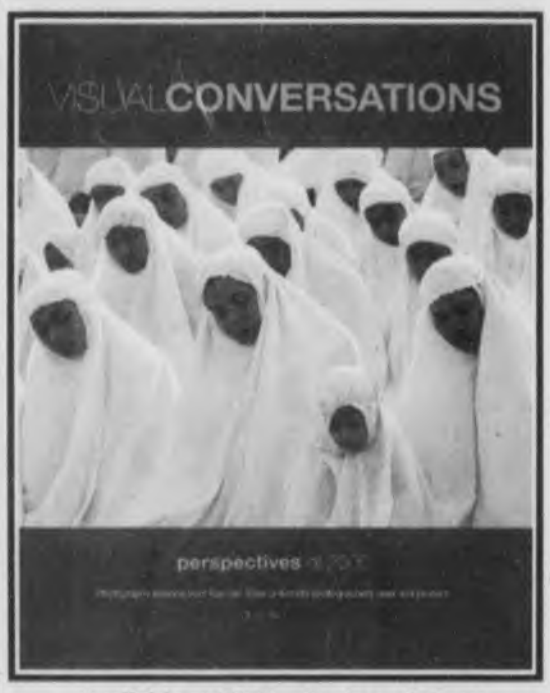
Anna Lampe, junior in interior architecture, is one of the students who helped develop the exhibit for the interior architecture and product design program.

"(It's) based on the second floor of Seaton Hall, and we're going for a stream of consciousness kind of design ... it sounds kind of weird, but we'll have some boxes hanging from the ceiling, and we'll have a lot of furniture displays and projects that we've done," Lampe said.

She said she is a member of a committee of four students that has been planning the exhibit since the beginning of the semester, and they presented their idea to their class.

"It's a lot of hectic running around but should be a fairly good showing of student work," Lampe said.

She said they are trying to promote their program to students, prospective students and alumni to inform them about what interior architecture and product design students do, because they're often mistaken as being the same as interior designers.



Megan Vaeth, junior in interior architecture, said she encourages people to check out what is happening in the architecture program.

"It's a good way for people to see what we do, because I don't think they realize what all we're doing," she said. "It's a good opportunity to see the quality of the work we do and how we spend our time.

"It's really fun to show off our work, because we're proud of it, and it's good to show prospective students what our program is about."

Weekend's activities sponsored through business, campus funding

By Sheila Ellis
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's All-University Open House is an event filled with information for prospective students on what K-State has to offer, but K-State's budget won't suffer because of all the entertainment and activities.

Most of the festivities are funded or donated by local businesses and campus organizations.

"A lot of the stuff we do comes from donations," said Bryce Huschka, open house student coordinator and senior in industrial engineering.

"We've got an entertainment committee who gets bands to come out for free. Anything local is usually free, but this year we are having the Kansas City Marching Cobras come out, and they were paid," Huschka said.

Ballard's Sporting Goods, 1218 Moro St., donated T-shirts that say "Lost?" for the student guides; a dunk tank was donated by Greek Affairs; and prizes, including football tickets from the K-State Alumni Center and signed footballs from the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics, also were donated.

Most of the academic departments organize events that do not cost the department.

"We utilize what we already have," said Lisa Hanson, academic adviser for the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications. "We will have students read a 30-second news script where they can see themselves on a screen."

The Department of Architectural Engineering and Construction Science receives $400 for each open house display, department head Dave Fritchen said.

"Every year we have a contest within the College of Architecture seeing what department can make the best display.

Every year both architectural and construction have won first or second place, Fritchen said.

Advertising is one of the few open house costs the university covers.

"Each department of each college have to finance their own displays," said Emily Lehning, assistant dean of student life and coordinator of New Student Services. "For promotion there is a centralized budget, mailings to high school and billboards to get the word out about open house."

Most colleges have money allocated through their colleges, Lehning said.

"Colleges used to have their own separate open house, separate days, and now it's all on one day," Huschka said.

Each department will have an area on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union. The colleges contribute money for the overall expenses of each department, which are responsible for their own booths, said Alison Wheatley, assistant dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

VIP events target sophomores, transfers

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

At K-State's All-University Open House this year, several events for prospective students and their families have been given the title of VIP.

"I think that's the way of saying that (these events) are spotlighted for specific groups of students," Julie Katz, assistant director of admissions, said.

Whereas many of the events for open house are sponsored by specific colleges at K-State, the VIP events are geared like prospective students such as community college transfers and high school students and their families.

Here are some of the VIP events that will take place at open house 2006:

FOR SOPHOMORES ONLY

For Sophomores Only will take place today and Saturday,. As the name suggests, it is for high school sophomores.

"We've invited high school sophomores to come to Manhattan for Friday and Saturday, and they do everything from college simulation, different activities that resemble college life, they have different information sessions, and they'll have a dance in the Union," said Andrea Bryant-Gladin, associate director of alumni programs. "We've mailed letters to students in our admissions database, as well as posters and information to several high schools."

Bryant-Gladin said preregistration is required for the event, which costs $18 for both today and Saturday and $15 for Saturday only.

For questions about this event, call the Alumni Association at (785) 532-6260.

TIPS: TRANSFER INFORMATION PROGRAM FOR SUCCESS

TIPS is a program specifically for transfer students that will take place on Saturday at 9 a.m. in the Big 12 Room of the K-State Student Union.

"All transfer students were invited, but we focused primarily on the 19 Kansas community colleges," Katz said. "We'll have sessions – Dr. (Pat) Bosco does a session on navigating the K-State transfer path, and we have concurrent sessions that will be going on throughout the day."

Katz said the informational sessions will cover such topics as on-campus housing, part-time jobs, internships, scholarships and financial aid.

Katz said it is difficult for transfer students to find time for a college visit, because, unlike high school students, they aren't allotted a certain number of days off for that purpose.

For more information, call the Office of Admissions at (800) 432-8270.

MULTICULTURAL STUDENTS AND FAMILIES RECEPTION

"Basically, we've tried to stick within a six-state region for this reception," said Morgan Fisher, admissions representative with New Student Services. "Basically the states that border Kansas, and then Texas."

Fisher said the reception, which takes place from 10 to 11 a.m. Saturday in the Bluemont Room of the Union, is for students who are planning to come to K-State.

"They actually get to meet with faculty who work with diversity issues, and get a chance to talk with them," Fisher said. "It's going to be pretty laid back, and the professors enjoy getting to meet with the students, and hopefully when it comes time for them to choose a university, they'll say 'hey, I had a pretty good experience at K-State,' and they'll choose to come here."

For information on more VIP events, check out the Open House Web site at http://consider.k-state.edu/openhouse/events/index.htm.

Arts and Sciences to feature 30 exhibits

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The College of Arts and Sciences will display 30 stations at the All-University Open House on Saturday. The event will take place from 9 a.m. until 3 p.m., and the majority of the school's activities will take place on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union.

"A lot of work goes into showcasing the best of what's going on in each department," Alison Wheatley, assistant dean, said.

Main attractions include tightrope-walking rats presented by the psychology undergraduate honor society, Psi Chi.

Psychology students trained the rats to walk from one platform to another by rewarding them with food, Richard Harris, professor of psychology, said.

"This is a really fun display at open house," Harris said. "It is very popular with the community, especially kids."

The Department of Modern Languages will offer displays complete with dancing, music and costumes, and the women's studies program will have gingerbread women for decorating.

The A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications will have a display in Kedzie Hall that gives guests the chance to perform on camera. People can read reports and then watch themselves on television, Jenna Newsum, junior in psychology, said.

To plan for this event, each department had its own planning committee, which consisted of a lead faculty member and a lead student.

"It's definitely been a new and exciting thing," Newsum said.

Campus organizations court, inform potential members

By Dayne Logan
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members from several campus organizations will attend the All-University Open House to spread the word about their causes.

More than 50 student organizations and clubs are expected to attend, said Shea Larson, senior in communication sciences and disorders and student life exhibit coordinator for open house.

Organizations expected to attend range from more activities-oriented clubs like the Water Ski, Wrestling and Parachute clubs to religious organizations like the Muslim Student Association and the American Baptist Student Ministry.

Additionally, several charitable organizations like Up 'Til Dawn, Relay for Life and the American Red Cross will be in attendance.

Most of the organizations will be on the first floor of the K-State Student Union, but some of the department organizations will be set up in their respective buildings, Larson said.

Brie Handgraaf, junior in mass communications and president of Scrapbookers Unite, said clubs can be a great recruitment tool for K-State.

"Last year, we actually had a student choose K-State because of the club," Handgraaf said. "It's one of those clubs that not a lot of schools have."

Nelson Pratt, senior in mechanical engineering and president of the Society of Automotive Engineers, said his club will have members of its design teams present to show prospective students their work with the hope of enticing some of the visitors to come to K-State in the future.

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN
Brian Halder, K-State Parachute Club member and senior in industrial engineering, approaches the "drop zone" as he floats toward the ground during a parachute jump Jan. 22 at the Wamego Airport.

Each year there are three teams, Pratt said. One designs a formula one car, one designs an off-road, baja-like vehicle, and the other designs a remote control aircraft.

"We're trying to recruit new team members, and a lot of high school students think that stuff is pretty cool," Pratt said.

In addition to clubs, campus housing organizations will be in the Union to distribute information. These organizations will be on the Union's second floor.

There will be a shuttle bus in front of the Union to take prospective students and their families to the greek houses, which will be open for tours from noon until 4 p.m.

Aggieville businesses prepare for influx of weekend visitors for shopping, dining

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Aggieville businesses are expecting an influx of customers with the All-University Open House on Saturday.

"We are aware that it is open house, and we always see an influx of students and their families in Aggieville," said Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association. "We're expecting a lot of people to come in and experience Aggieville with the shopping and dining."

Acme Gift, 1227 Moro St., and The Dusty Bookshelf, 700 N. Manhattan Ave., have seen an increase in customers at past open houses, said Diane Meredith, co-owner of Acme Gift and Thread and owner of The Dusty Bookshelf.

"It's always a really fun weekend," Meredith said. "There's a lot of people exploring and seeing what's around."

Meredith said her businesses are not having specials specifically for open house.

"We'll just try to fix up the stores and see things pretty and polished and put our best faces out there," she said.

Thread, 1224 Moro St., will allow customers to have same-day shirts made during open house, said David Sauter, co-owner of Thread and Acme Gift. The shirts start at $13.

Jeff Levin, co-owner of Varney's Book Store, 623 N. Manhattan St., said Varney's also is expecting an increase in business.

While Varney's is not having a sale specifically for open house, it is having a select spring sale, Levin said.

"Traditionally, open house is a big weekend for Aggieville," he said.

Junction City man arrested at mall

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Kansas Bureau of Investigation, in conjunction with the Riley County Police Department and the Geary County/ Junction City Drug Operations Group, arrested a Junction City, Kan., man on Thursday at Manhattan Town Center, according to a RCPD press release.

The location of his arrest was previously arranged, Lt. Hank Nelson of the RCPD said.

"It was where he wanted to meet," Nelson said.

Jermaine Eugene was arrested on multiple charges pertaining to the sale of cocaine and possession of cocaine in the Manhattan area, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

Eugene reportedly was in possession of more than nine grams of cocaine when he was arrested.

"It was part of an ongoing investigation in which narcotics were purchased," Quintanar said.

Eugene was charged with two counts of sale of cocaine, three counts of unlawful use of a telephonic device, two counts of unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds, three counts of no Kansas drug tax stamp and one count of possession of cocaine with the intent to distribute.

All charges against Eugene are felonies.

A search of Eugene's residence at 652 Goldenbelt Blvd., Junction City revealed about one-half pound of cocaine, digital scales and about $1,600 in cash.

Bond for Eugene was set at $40,000.

Board considers change

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. – The Kansas Board of Education on Tuesday considers a proposal requiring abstinence-only sex education across the state.

Under the proposal, districts that teach more than abstinence could risk losing accreditation.

"Abstinence until marriage is the best thing for young people physically, emotionally, psychologically and spiritually," said board member Kathy Martin. "It's the best thing for society as a whole, and it's the message that schools absolutely ought to be sending."

Martin proposed the change.

Opponents say abstinence-only programs are unproven and impractical.

"We don't want our kids to have sex, but unfortunately the reality is that a lot of them are," said Sandy Hysom, health education teaching specialist for Wichita schools. "Therefore, we have to give them accurate information."

Molly Hoss, junior in biology, and sister Megan Hoss, graduate student at the University of Kansas, ran into the bowling alley of the K-State Student Union on Saturday and found a group of volunteers waiting with smiles.

One volunteer pushed an instruction sheet toward the pair, telling them they were going bowling – blindfolded.

The Hosses were one of seven teams who spent Saturday at K-State's All-University Open House racing around campus for a good cause.

The pair hurried to complete the task as participants in Campus Escape, a fast-paced race around campus to raise funds for K-State's Habitat for Humanity.

After finishing their challenge, the sisters breathed heavily as they plopped down on the floor to spend a five-minute penalty planning where their next stop would be.

"We wished we would have worked out before this," Megan said.

Molly said she heard about the fund-raising event through a few e-mails she received from the group and wanted to participate with her sister.

"We're basically in it for the adventure," Molly said. "But we love that it goes to a good cause as well."

A $25 registration fee per participant benefitted K-State's Habitat for Humanity.

With only seven teams competing, Clay Myers-Bowman, owner and manager of Blue Hills Adventures, said the group was slightly discouraged by the turnout.

"Honestly, we're a little disappointed," he said. "The disappointing part is that we're not going to raise as much money for Habitat. But with a lot of things going on, we're just going to have fun."

Myers-Bowman said the group had to cancel Campus Escape last year but decided it would definitely have it this year, despite low numbers.

"No matter how many teams we had, we said that we were still going

Callers receive grand prizes for Telefund help

Telefund 2006, also known as "CSI: K-State," officially was declared "case closed."

A banquet and closing ceremony took place Saturday at the K-State Student Union to show gratitude for the $1.41 million pledged during 23 sessions earlier this semester.

Present at the luncheon were alumni donors, several sponsors of Telefund 2006 and the K-State staff who helped make it all possible. Guests of honor included members of the Wichita Area Big Wheels, a club that donates the grand prize – the Teletruck – each year.

Charles Belew, member of the Wichita Area Big Wheels, said he enjoyed attending the luncheon.

"It gives me a chance to see the people who have the potential to win the pickup," he said. "And seeing the excitement Telefund creates – it's just amazing."

Phil White, junior in agricultural communications and journalism and student director for Telefund, said he was pleased with the turnout at the event.

"It's an informal gathering," White said. "And it's nice to recognize the donors who support us as well as the six student winners."

Also in attendance were six student callers and their parents. These students were randomly selected by Ruth Ann Wefald, President Jon Wefald's wife, to receive the six grand prizes, donated to "CSI: K-State" to thank students for their willingness to help.

The finalists included Chris Bird, junior in agricultural economics; Janine Feldkamp, senior in elementary education; Brian Gengler, sophomore in biology; Erin Reusser, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education; Stephanie Roberts, senior in marketing; and Kristen Schulte, freshman in agricultural economics.

The Teletruck, a new Nissan Frontier, was awarded to Roberts. The second place prize, a $1,000

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

8 men found slain

SHEDDEN, Ontario — The bodies of eight men were found inside four vehicles abandoned in a remote wooded area on a farmer's property in rural Ontario, Canada, about 20 miles southwest of the city of London. Police were not disclosing many details about the deaths except to say that four vehicles were involved, including a tow truck, and that the dead were all men. They were found Saturday morning.

Explanation sought

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney should speak publicly about their involvement in the CIA leak case so people can understand what happened, a leading Republican senator said Sunday. "We ought to get to the bottom of it so it can be evaluated by the American people," said Sen. Arlen Specter of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

26 dead after stampede

KARACHI, Pakistan — At least 26 women and children were suffocated or crushed to death Sunday in a stampede at a religious gathering in southern Pakistan, police and doctors said. More than 70 people were injured. The stampede occurred at an Islamic center of a Sunni Muslim group in downtown Karachi as thousands of women left the gathering for a rally, said Karachi police official Zahid Hussain.

Red Cross overhauls disaster response system

NEW YORK – Assailed for its many missteps in the wake of Hurricane Katrina, the American Red Cross is plunging into a daunting, two-track effort to overhaul its entire disaster response system and the often cumbersome way it governs itself.

There is pressure to move quickly and convincingly.

The new hurricane season starts June 1, and the Red Cross is hurrying to get its new response plans in place before any big storms arrive.

It also hopes to complete an independent audit this summer and offer governance reform proposals to Congress before skeptical politicians start pushing their own reform plans.

FENCE JUMPER MAKES IT TO LAWN

WASHINGTON, D.C. – A screaming intruder made it onto the front lawn of the White House Sunday while President Bush was at home before being apprehended by Secret Service officers.

Secret Service spokesman Eric Zahren described the man as "someone who has come to our attention in the past as a fence jumper."

The man eventually kneeled on the ground and was taken into custody shortly before 4 p.m.

LEAK INQUIRY SEES TWIST

WASHINGTON, D.C. – Now in its third year, the CIA leak investigation took a decidedly unwelcome turn for the White House last week.

Bush
PRESIDENT

A court filing by prosecutors depicted President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney as setting in motion leaks to the press that ended in the disclosure of the identity of covert CIA officer Valerie Plame.

AUTHOR CLEARED OF CHARGES

LONDON – "The Da Vinci Code" author Dan Brown and his publishing house were cleared of copyright infringement in a British court Friday, with the judge finding the lawsuit based on a contrived and "selective number of facts and ideas."

COLLEGE BOARD, TEST COMPANY SUED FOR ERROR

ST. PAUL, Minn. – A high school senior whose SAT was incorrectly scored low is suing the board that oversees the exam and the testing company that was hired.

The lawsuit, filed late Friday in Minnesota, was believed to be the first since last month's announcement that 4,411 students got incorrectly low scores and that more than 600 had better results than they deserved on the October test.

U.S., EU CUT PALESTINIAN FUNDING

WASHINGTON, D.C. – The Bush administration said Friday it would cut, suspend or shift up to $411 million in Palestinian aid over the next few years as part of an international effort to deny funds to the radical Hamas movement that won control of the Palestinian government.

The European Union announced that it, too, was cutting off funds, denying the Hamas-led government the bulk of the foreign underwriting that keeps services running.

ALLEGED GOSPEL OF JUDAS FOUND

Dating of the "Gospel of Judas" is religiously crucial, though some just will enjoy an intriguing tale.

The tale of how the "Gospel of Judas" was rediscovered is worthy of a hard-boiled detective novel, but there's an even more tantalizing religious mystery – whether the newly released document tells us anything authentic about either Jesus or Judas.

There seems little doubt that the document published by National Geographic is, indeed, ancient – despite a murky recent history.

Speaker, choirs center on passion

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Wayne Jones II, senior in social science, sings a solo part while performing with K-State's United Black Voices Gospel Choir as part of the fourth-annual Spirit Spectacular on Saturday evening at First Assembly of God Church. The choir was one of three groups that sang at the event.

Hand-clapping, dancing in the pews and shouts of "Hallelujah" accompanied gospel music Saturday night at the fourth-annual Spirit Spectacular.

"Are you ready for the experience?" Sherice Booker, mistress of ceremonies, asked. "Expect it to happen."

Three groups performed, including K-State's United Black Voices Gospel Choir, Tribe and the Ebony Gospel Choir from the University of Central Oklahoma.

The keynote speaker for the evening was Jerron Williams, a pastor from Atlanta. The concert was at the First Assembly of God Church, 2310 Candlewood Drive.

Jason Brooks, United Black Voices director, said there are several reasons he is involved in the choir.

"The music and the inspiration that it comes from," he said. "Fellowship and getting to share mine with fellow Christians."

Brooks, junior in music education, said he received the director's position last year.

"It was the end of the season for the old director and the choir wanted a student director at the time," he said.

The music is the most important part of the experience, Brooks said.

"The most special thing we have is the message that we bring out to the people," he said.

Kendra Spencer, public relations chair for the choir, said she liked having the concert off-campus.

"This concert was a good opportunity to get into the community and get off of campus," she said. "It shows the community what is going on at K-State."

Spencer, senior in sociology and an alto in the choir, said she loves singing with the choir because of the environment.

"The atmosphere, the love and the fellowship is amazing," she said. "I was happy to find people who believe what I do."

Choir members' families, community members and K-State students attended the concert.

Joel Rooks, junior in social work, said the concert was a positive experience for him.

"I liked seeing energy and the love for God that was on the stage," he said. "They have such a power and passion, and it shows through their music."

Barbeque battle enlivens Spring Game weekend

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will have the inaugural Wildcat Barbeque Battle on April 22 as part of Spring Game activities.

The three different divisions of participants will include the open division, the K-State division and the tailgater division. The cost of entering the open division is $125, and the cost to enter the K-State division and the tailgater division is $30, said Lon Floyd, assistant director of the athletic department.

The competition will begin at 9 a.m. April 21, and winners will be announced at the game.

Gov. Kathleen Sebelius sanctioned the open division as a state of Kansas championship level competition, Floyd said. The open division also is sanctioned by the Kansas City Barbeque Society. This allows the grand champion of the division an entry into the American Royal Barbecue Contest.

"This is a division for more accomplished, experienced barbeque participants," Floyd said.

The grand champion also will be awarded $1,000.

The open division will be judged on chicken, pork, beef brisket and ribs and will be judged according to the Kansas City Barbeque Society rules.

The K-State group division and the tailgater division will be judged on one rack of barbeque pork ribs. The winner will be awarded $75.

"This is more of a fun category," Floyd said. "It's a good time for these participants to show off their backyard barbeque skills."

Floyd said the department is still accepting entries. No deadline has been set.

There will be 35 judges overseeing the event, Floyd said.

Judges will attend a class prior to the event taught by the Kansas City Barbeque Society.

"This will teach them how to judge, how the event will run and what goes into being a good judge," Floyd said.

The decision to add a barbeque contest to the Spring Game events was made after football coach Ron Prince came to K-State, said Gary Davidson, contest director and president of the Kansas City, Kan., Catbacker Club.

"When Prince came to Kansas State, he had indicated they had a carnival-like atmosphere at Virginia, and we wanted to have something similar for the Spring Game," Davidson said.

Davidson said there are rules for the competitors to follow while they prepare their food.

"Most of the rules are for hygiene and health concerns," Davidson said.

Mary Molt, assistant director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, will judge the competition.

"I have always been interested in food and how to cook," she said.

Molt said she will look for food quality and how it relates to the flavor and the nature of the food.

"I look for very common indicators of quality," Molt said.

Greek Week focuses on philanthropy

By Lacey Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students in the greek system will spend their next few days playing games, having fun and supporting local charitable organizations.

K-State's Greek Affairs will have its fifth-annual Greek Week this week. Events will continue through Friday.

Activities include the Greek Olympics, a "Price is Right" game, community barbeques, a Greek Idol singing competition and a canned food drive.

Jeremy Anterola, junior in landscape architecture and public relations director for Greek Week, said games and events will be used to draw students, but the week has a deeper importance.

"It used to be for more entertainment," Anterola said. "We're trying to turn them into more philanthropic, student-based events."

Students can begin the week by attending the Greek Olympic games at 6 tonight at Memorial Stadium.

A "Price is Right" game will be an opportunity for greek students to play games and win prizes while supporting the T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter.

Audience members and participants are asked to donate $1. The event begins at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the K-State Student Union's Forum Hall.

Brie Spencer, senior in marketing, helped organize the "Price is Right" game and said students will have the opportunity to be one of four contestants vying for a spot in the showcase showdown, which offers a variety of prizes.

To be eligible to participate, Spencer said students are asked to give a $1 donation and wear their official Greek Week 2006 T-shirts. Names will be placed on a numbered list and be chosen at random.

Community barbeques will be 5:30 p.m. Wednesday at six different sorority and fraternity houses.

A 5K run, sponsored by Greeks Advocating the Mature Management of Alcohol (GAMMA), will be at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

At Thursday's Greek Idol, a singing competition based on the popular "American Idol" TV show, 12 pre-chosen groups to perform before an audience and local celebrity icons.

The final event of the week will be a canned-food drive, "Greeks-For-Cans," beginning at 5 p.m. Friday. All items will be given to the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Rachel Strouts, junior in bakery science and management, has worked with Greek Week for three years and said she is looking forward to the events happening this week.

"We've been working on this week since December," Strouts said. "It will be neat to see how it will all come together."

Strouts said the week is a time for greek students to relax and enjoy time together.

"It's time we can enjoy the friendships we have in the greek community," she said. "It's just kind of a celebration."

Although the week will be full of fun and games, Strouts said events encourage giving to others as well.

"We've tried to add elements of philanthropy into the week," she said. "With the greek community, you get out of it what you put into it. You'll reap the benefits of what you put in. A week like Greek Week is fun to get involved and make those connections."

TO THE POINT

Time often a better donation than money

Graduation is rapidly approaching for the class of 2006. With graduation comes excitement, stress and, for many, a long list of bills and debts to pay.

That is why it is not high on the priority list for many graduating K-Staters to start donating money to the university, especially immediately after investing thousands of dollars over the past few years to be a Wildcat.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The fact of the matter is, many students probably can't afford to give money to the K-State Student Foundation right away.

It also is frustrating to open letters asking for money – before even graduating.

It is true that without generous monetary donations from K-State alumni, we could not enjoy and utilize many of the perks K-State affords its students and faculty. But there are other ways of giving back to your alma mater without sending a check in the mail.

For example, each year K-State graduates many students who go on to take advantage of their college education with solid careers. Why not use the minds of alumni to help K-State? Offer alumni phone numbers so students can call and ask questions or give an address where students can send their résumés. To many, that is a greater donation than building renovations and new computers.

Unobtainable beauty

Playboy's false body ideals degrade women

Playboy recently visited Manhattan in search of a K-State representative for its special edition, "Girls of the Big 12."

DANIEL KIRKSEY

The Collegian featured an article by Eileen Laux, who interviewed Shawna Berry and Megan Stearman, two participants of the photo shoot with opinions about the idea of Playboy.

Berry is quoted as saying, "The human body is one of the most beautiful things in the world," while Stearman similarly states, "Nudity is not vulgar, and it's not pornography or sex.

"I would go to a nude beach and not have a problem.

"I am comfortable with it, because the human body is a beautiful thing."

These are both interesting things to say, but what did they mean in saying them?

Beauty is a tricky word to define.

Through the ages, various intellectuals have disagreed on the matter.

Plato (since we're all college students) for example, sees beauty in that which evokes virtue and touches truth.

For Théophile Gautier (a 19th century aesthetic critic), virtue is useful and therefore disgusting.

He says, "Nothing is really beautiful unless it is useless; everything useful is ugly, for it expresses a need, and the needs of man are ignoble and disgusting, like his poor weak nature.

"The most useful place in a house is the lavatory."

My point is that "beauty" is controversial.

Two people seldom agree and Playboy's idea of beauty might not be what some people have in mind.

If Playboy really thought the human body was a beautiful thing, then why do they never show a real human body – no makeup or airbrushing allowed, just real women?

The fact is that a woman's body as it appears in Playboy is never as her body appears in real life.

What Playboy shows in its magazines are unattainable ideals of a woman's body made possible by the magic of computer artists and airbrushes.

This impossible precedent, set by Playboy and its participants, is a poison to society.

Men, bombarded on a daily basis by Playboy and Playboy-like images, set their standards by these women.

This standard is dangerous because it is a perfection no one can attain.

Discontent is a dangerous thing when it comes to marriages and other similar relationships.

When listening to some opinions, one gets the idea that men sit down with a cup of coffee, a cigar and Mozart in the background to study the aesthetic value of the women in the pages of Playboy.

Can't you just see it?

John Doe, with his precision measuring equipment, analyzing the symmetry of the centerfold and comparing her proportions to Da Vinci's "Vitruvian Man."

Don't kid yourselves, ladies.

In Playboy, a woman is reduced to a simple object meant to quench the thirst of a man's sexual desire.

A thirst that can never be quenched by pictures alone.

The pictures become commonplace, eventually making even the goddess-like bodies not enough, therefore propelling the false ideal of bodily perfection to higher levels.

It is a cancer.

Some women say they don't understand why women wouldn't want to pose for Playboy.

I would say it's because other women see the definite problems created by the false ideals Playboy instills in our culture.

Or maybe it's because they value their bodies as more than some faceless stranger's attempt at sexual gratification.

Perfect career found through trial, error

There are some people who are so lucky.

The moment they are born they know exactly what they want to do for their careers.

MEGAN GREEN

But others, like me, aren't so lucky and have no idea where they would fit best.

I'm a senior, but I will be graduating in December, so I have an extra semester to figure out my future career, or at least my first job. This also gives me a great chance to really figure out what I want to do.

Let's face it, I chose a public relations major, but maybe I want to do a few different things with it – like be a broadcaster or work in the marketing department at a company.

To be honest, lately I have been really nervous and anxious about finding what I am "supposed" to do.

I've always thought that there is one specific place for everyone to work because that is what he or she is best at or has always dreamed about – but I have no idea what my job should be.

This scares me. What if I really suck at my job, and I mean really suck, and really should be doing something completely different? I feel like I should be allowed to try a different job each day and find something I love, but we all know that can't happen.

When you get a job, I've always thought you should love to go to work and love the people and overall just really love your job.

I think there is one job everyone fits in and works the best in. Take, for instance, Donald Trump or Vera Wang. They both are extremely good at their jobs, and they both love them. I was worrying about this last week, and my boyfriend finally gave me some advice I could use – every person, on average, changes their job at least three times before they figure out what they want to do.

I'm not sure if he said that just so I would stop whining to him, but it really made sense. It really helped calm me down. This means I'm not alone. I can change my job as many different times as I want to really find my niche.

It makes sense that your job will change a few times, because when you ask someone how they got somewhere, usually they just fell into it. They took this really erratic path and made something great out of it.

That was a revelation for me. I now feel like I can take my time deciding what I want to do and really enjoy it.

We spend our whole lives working, so why not make it something you enjoy?

Campaign encourages donations

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The KSU Student Foundation will celebrate Time, Talent and Treasure April 10-12.

The accomplishments of K-State alumni and what current students can do to help their colleges after graduation will be posted around campus today, Tuesday and Wednesday. Bright green, purple and white signs with these facts will be placed on campus next to the colleges they affect.

"I know students know the student foundation is there, but they may not know all that we do," said Adriane Moss, senior in music education and co-chair of Student Foundation. "This is a good way for students to see contributions given by alumni and for them to look ahead."

Amber Weaver, Student Foundation adviser, said putting the signs around campus is a creative way to create awareness.

"The Student Foundation's mission is to remind students of the enhanced opportunities they are given because of the generosity of alumni and friends of Kansas State University," Weaver said.

"Additionally, Student Foundation creates awareness among current students about the importance of charitable giving and prepares current students to become regular contributors to Kansas State University once they have graduated."

According to its Web site, the program goal of Time, Talent and Treasure is "to create awareness among all K-State students regarding how they have benefited from private support and create a culture in which all graduates understand and believe that it is their responsibility to support the university after they graduate."

The Web site has many facts that pertain to alumni donations and "if" statements. For example, if every graduate gave $100 per year in scholarships, K-State could triple the number of scholarship dollars awarded, and if every graduate donated $1, the library could stay open longer and purchase more subscriptions, books and special services for students.

Matt Woerman, senior in mechanical engineering, and Andy Ellis, junior in finance, assemble signs Sunday afternoon that were posted in front of Anderson Hall for Time, Talent and Treasure. The signs are placed around campus with information about K-State alumni and what current students can do help their colleges after graduation.

Steven Doll
COLLEGIAN

Donations from alumni and friends make Hale Library and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art possible, Weaver said.

Dan Patrick, senior in mass communications and president of Student Foundation, said students might not realize the effect they can have.

"It is so important for us to try and educate students through the Time, Talent and Treasure program how a small amount of money from a significant amount of alumni can have such a positive effect on our campus," Patrick said.

"So much of K-State's funding is dependent on private donations that it is absolutely critical that students continue the tradition of giving back to K-State after they graduate."

"We have some of the most generous alumni in the nation, and I think it is a necessity and an honor for us as students to continue this legacy."

Andrew Ellis, junior in finance and co-chair of Student Foundation, said he hopes the signs will make students stop and think about how great K-State is and how they can help continue to make it great.

For $750, a graduate can be a lifetime member of the K-State Alumni Association.

Women practice gun skills, safety

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Brieanna Hartrum brought her .40 caliber Glock handgun, and Donna Baer, volunteer firefighter with the Riley County Fire Department, brought a Colt .45 automatic pistol.

Both attended Women On Target at Fancy Creek Range in Tuttle Creek State Park on Saturday and came prepared to practice shooting and make new friends.

"We're both interested in improving our skills with handguns," Hartrum said.

The pair also were looking forward to playing with the rifles and shotguns, Hartrum said.

Hartrum, Ogden, Kan., resident, is a volunteer firefighter with the Riley County Fire Department and a gate guard at Fort Riley.

She is the second female firefighter in the Junction City Fire Department, she said.

"And the first one to finish the training, nonetheless," she said.

Also attending the shooting day was Patti Essary, Alta Vista, Kan., resident and friend of Hartrum.

Essary said she found out about the event through the newspaper.

She attended in part because her husband is in the National Guard and is interested in guns, she said.

Baer, Randolph, Kan., resident, has used all types of weaponry, she said.

Married 32 years, Baer learned gun safety from her husband, but the safety lessons she learned at the shooting day were a little different, she said.

Baer had several reasons for participating in the recreational shooting day, she said, and one was personal safety.

"I'm by myself a fair amount of the time," she said.

Since the passage of the concealed weapons law, an additional reason for taking the class was to practice to get the permit, Baer said.

"An NRA (National Rifle Association) certified course will be required in the certification process," she said.

Although weapons were provided, Hartrum and Baer preferred to bring their own.

It made more sense to use a weapon for practice that she would use normally, Baer said.

Hartrum said she prefers Glock handguns and felt it was better to practice with a weapon of her own, she said.

"I'm a big fan of the Glock," Hartrum said.

Kern takes 1st, sets lowest-score record

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

PGA tour member Phil Mickelson won his second Masters Tournament title Sunday by holding off charges from Fred Couples, Tiger Woods, Jose Maria Olazabal and Tim Clark.

But before he competed for the coveted Green Jacket, he was winning collegiate tournaments for Arizona State University.

In 1991 and '92, Mickelson won the ASU Thunderbird Invitational in Tempe, Ariz., and Sunday, K-State senior Ben Kern joined Mickelson, as he won the individual title at the ASU Thunderbird Invitational.

Kern entered the final round at the 7,017-yard, par-71 ASU Karsten Course with a one-stroke lead and held on to win the tournament. After shooting his second-consecutive round of 65 and a third round in the 60s, Kern had a total of 199, 14-under par (69-65-65).

This was the same course on which Kern shot a total score of 15-over 228 to tie for 63rd last year.

This year, however, Kern set the Thunderbird Invitational record for lowest score, becoming the first player in the 34-year history of the tournament to shoot under 200.

Kern, a native of Tucson, Ariz., which is 100 miles from Tempe, said he was excited about the chance to win a tournament in front of so many loyal fans.

"This was a lot of fun," Kern said in a release. "My parents

NFL | Williams' NFL future on the line

NEW YORK — The football future of Miami Dolphins tailback Ricky Williams, both short- and long-term, could be on the line Monday, as the NFL convenes a hearing to consider the appeal of the erstwhile runner to allegations that he again violated the league's substance abuse policy.

Williams

The hearing will be in New York and, unless Williams is successful in his appeal, he faces a year-long exile from the league.

According to reports, Williams tested positive, likely in December toward the end of the 2005 season, to a substance banned by the league.

In at least three other violations, Williams tested positive for marijuana. Several sources have claimed that the substance in the latest positive test was not marijuana.

Once known as a lovable loser who went a dozen years before figuring out how to win golf's biggest events, Mickelson captured his second-straight major Sunday at Augusta National without needing a photo-finish.

He closed with a 3-under 69 for a two-shot victory and his second green jacket in three years.

There were no thrills for Mickelson, but rather calculated shots that forced Fred Couples, Tiger Woods and Vijay Singh to try to catch him.

Instead, they stumbled along with three-putts and a litany of other mistakes.

Prince pieces together starters

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The halfway point of spring football practice has concluded, and after Saturday's open practice, coach Ron Prince said he is beginning to put together the pieces of the starting-position puzzle.

"There are some technical things that we're still working the bugs through," Prince said. "But I think from top to bottom, every kid on the roster has improved this week.

"As far as our evaluation of players, we've been into this thing going on two weeks, and I'm starting to form some opinions. It's really early to say that any of them are final."

Prince said he was pleased with the progress of certain players like senior linebackers Zach Diles and Brandon Archer and freshman offensive lineman Derek Meyer. He said he likes the progress made by senior offensive lineman Greg Wafford.

"I don't think anybody has raised their game from week one to week two as much as Greg Wafford," Prince said. "Greg's taken a lot of coaching and has really responded well."

With the quarterback position still up for grabs, each of the five candidates got a chance to show his stuff on Saturday in front of a crowd of about 800 fans.

Sophomore quarterback Allan Evridge got a significant amount of playing time with the first-team offense Saturday, but Prince said not to look too much into that, as all five quarterbacks will have their share of playing time with the first team before a final decision is made.

One of those five players is freshman quarterback Josh Freeman.

Freeman is new to the Wildcat program, but he said he feels like he can play with the longer-tenured men and possibly win the starting job if he works hard enough between now and the first game.

"I am doing well for just being here for three weeks, and all the quarterbacks are beginning to get a basic understanding about the fundamental reads and the other basic stuff," Freeman said. "I need to just keep grinding and do my best if I want to be the starter.

"It's just going to come down to who learns the fastest and who can translate it onto the field."

SALINA, Kan. – It was all smiles for fans, players and officials at the Second Annual State of Kansas Women's Basketball Showcase Sunday at Salina's Bicentennial Center.

"It was fun," said Kendra Wecker, who plays for the WNBA's San Antonio Silver Stars. "We just came out and had a good time. It was good to see some familiar faces."

The exhibition game featured selected high school seniors against Kansas college legends, including former K-State greats and WNBA players in Wecker and Laurie Koehn, along with senior Wildcat Jessica McFarland.

Wecker, Koehn and McFarland were joined by Kansas' Crystal Kemp and Erica Hallman; Washburn's April Roadhouse and Jennifer Harris; and Missouri State's Sarah Klaassen. Former WNBA player

Texas beats Cats in close game

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

After Texas pummeled K-State in both games of a doubleheader on Saturday, senior Joe Roundy wasn't happy.

"For them to come into our house and beat us like that definitely (ticked) us off a little," Roundy said. "We'll definitely be flying around tomorrow."

K-State (21-8, 2-7) made good on Roundy's promise, battling No. 9 Texas (24-11, 9-2) for 10 innings on Sunday before falling 10-9 at Tointon Family Stadium.

Texas' Nick Kainer launched a two-out, two-run double over the head of freshman centerfielder Tyler Link that put Texas ahead for good in the top of the 10th.

In the bottom of the 10th, senior Brandon Farr drew a one-out walk, and freshman Nate Tenbrink reached on an error. Junior Eli Rumler smashed a double that pulled K-State within a run, but Link bounced into a bases-loaded double play to end the game.

"They tried to give it to us, and we wouldn't take it," coach Brad Hill said. "Unfortunately, we gave a few too many things back to them. You can't let them do that in the last inning. You've got to go ahead and win that game."

Texas committed five errors in the game, including two by third baseman Nick Peoples in the first inning. K-State capitalized on those errors and grabbed an early 3-1 lead.

Style medley in SpringDance's 13 numbers stirs audience response

By Cj Lehr
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Tornadoes and rain one day with blue skies the next: the signs of the season were present for the final rehearsal and two performances of SpringDance 2006 in McCain Auditorium.

Featuring 13 dances, including modern, ballet and jazz pieces, the April 7 and 8 SpringDance performances showcased 33 dancers.

The rain and chilly temperatures, around 50 degrees on opening night were a challenge for the dancers, said Julie Lin Pentz, assistant professor of speech communication, theatre and dance.

"The energy was really great in spite of the weather," Pentz said. "The dancers had to protect themselves from the weather. They're used to 80-degree weather."

High energy pieces like "Rock U!," which was set to the classic rock songs "We Will Rock You," "Born to be Wild," "You're No Good" and "Black Betty," got the most audience response and helped bring the energy level up for dancers and audience members, Neil Dunn, SpringDance production coordinator, said.

"They really step up when there is an audience," Dunn, instructor of speech, theater and dance, said. "They feed off of each other."

The variety of dance forms in the two-hour show made choosing a favorite piece difficult, Kelli Pitman, senior in English and journalism education, said.

"Because of the style and fun, my favorite was 'Material Orange,' but dancing-wise it was the mirrors," Pitman said.

"Material Orange" is a modern dance in which the dancers used a large orange cloth as a prop to cover, pull and roll themselves across the stage.

In "Mirrored Reflection" dancers utilized large frames as props.

After dancing in the show her sophomore year, Pitman said she now comes to watch her friends in the program.

"I just enjoy getting to see the dancers perform," Pitman said. "It's really the only dance performance in Manhattan."

Jason Kellner, freshman in pre-professional construction science and management, said he came to the show to watch his sister, Sarah Kellner, junior in pre-nursing.

"I liked the modern dance styles," he said. "'In Perpetuum' was my favorite."

Sarah Kellner was one of six dancers in the modern piece "In Perpetuum."

Jason Kellner said he understood the more abstract pieces that some audience members might not have, because he has been watched his sister dance for years.

Audience members who didn't understand all of the dances were still able to find a dance they liked, Amanda Slead, senior in theater, said.

"Anybody that came found something they liked," she said. "They might not have understood the whole concert or might not have ever seen some of the dance forms, but there was something for everybody."

Although SpringDance is the final performance for Slead at K-State and the last dance performance for the department this semester, most dancers continue to dance during the summer in various places including San Francisco and Seattle, Slead said. Many continue dancing after they graduate as well, she said.

"The performing is over at K-State but it's not over," she said.

The final K-State dance for Slead was the first for Christopher Miller, freshman in elementary education.

"SpringDance is an opportunity for students, even if they aren't majors, to perform," he said. "I think that's what makes SpringDance special."

Being able to show people what the dancers have been working on is important, Monette McKeeman, dancer and senior in kinesiology, said.

"I think it's really great that people have the opportunity to see the K-State dance department," she said.

"It's really different than what they expect, but it also opens their eyes to different styles."

Dancing with some of her friends for the last time before they graduate made this show special, McKeeman said.

"There's a lot more emotion put into it, and you get more of a feeling when you're dancing," she said.

McKeeman said she will graduate next year and hopes to be in more K-State performances before then but will keep dancing no matter what.

"I'm always going to be dancing," she said. "I just don't know when or where."

Keira Knightley donates Oscar dress

Keira Knightley donated the Vera Wang gown she wore to this year's Oscars to raise money for Oxfam's relief work in East Africa.

The burgundy silk-taffeta one-shoulder gown, which was custom-made for the 21-year-old actress, will be up for bids on the eBay auction Web site from April 21 to April 30.

"This is such an amazing dress, and I am really pleased to be able to donate it to Oxfam," said Knightley, nominated for a best actress Oscar for "Pride & Prejudice," in a statement Friday.

"I have seen the TV reports on the horrendous drought in East Africa, and I know how desperate things have become, so I am happy to be able to do something to help."

THIS WEEK... A look at events that occurred during this week in history, other bizarre holidays, happenings

TODAY National golfer's day

Some avid golfers might suggest every day is Golfer's Day. But on this day, it's official.

The only question is, does this day honor the golfer, the sport or the weather? Golfer's Day is an opportunity to be thankful that someone invented this addicting, yet relaxing hobby. Also referred to as "Golf Day," there is only one proper way to enjoy this day. And that's out on the golf course.

When Golfer's Day falls on a week day, it is even more special. That means you now have an excuse to take a day off and go play a round. Regardless of your score today, you know that even a bad day on the greens is better than a good day at class.

TUESDAY 1970: Apollo 13

On April 11, 1970, Apollo 13, the third lunar landing mission, was successfully launched from Cape Canaveral, Fla., carrying astronauts James A. Lovell, John L. Swigert and Fred W. Haise. The spacecraft's destination was the Fra Mauro highlands of the moon, where the astronauts were to explore the Imbrium Basin and conduct geological experiments. After an oxygen tank exploded on the evening of April 13, however, the new mission objective became to get the Apollo 13 crew home alive.

WEDNESDAY 1945: Franklin Delano Roosevelt dies

U.S. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt died of a cerebral hemorrhage in his home in Warm Springs, Georgia, on this day in 1945. The only man to be elected to four terms as president of the United States, Roosevelt is remembered for his New Deal social policies and his leadership during wartime. Certain wartime decisions by Roosevelt proved controversial, such as the demand of unconditional surrender of the Axis powers, which some claim prolonged the war.

Scrabble Day celebrates the popular board game. It's been popular around the world ever since. People young and old enjoy this game. Scrabble was created in 1938 by Alfred Mosher Butts. It is sold by Hasbro, Inc. It's easy to celebrate Scrabble Day. Just get out the old board game, dust it off and play a few rounds with family or friends.

FRIDAY Dreading taxes

Uh oh, it's April 14. One day left before taxes are due. Even if you don't know what that means, your parents probably do — it's Tax Day. Income taxes are usually due on this day from all employed Americans. Income taxes have become such a common part of our lives it is hard to imagine that, at one time, there was no income tax in the United States.

Taxes are traditionally due on April 15. However, since April 15 falls on a Saturday this year, the official deadline has been moved to Monday, April 17.

If you don't have your taxes done yet, you have the weekend to get your deductions and W-2s all figured out.

to do this," he said.

The race began with a K-State trivia quiz. Teams began the race based on the number of questions they answered correctly.

Participants were required to stop at 12 locations around the K-State campus and accomplish three challenges that tested both their physical and mental strength.

The three challenges included bowling blindfolded, completing a Sudoku puzzle and shooting baskets or eating a number of doughnut holes.

At each location and challenge, teams obtained a letter used to determine the race's off-campus finish line.

Jayme Cooper, sophomore in sociology and special events coordinator for K-State's Habitat for Humanity, said the group was excited to have the event, but student involvement in other events during Open House contributed to the event's low participation.

"In ways this weekend was good, and in ways it was not good," Cooper said.

While the group tried to promote it, Katrina Marshall, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management and K-State's Habitat for Humanity secretary, said the group relied on word-of-mouth.

"It's one of those things that everybody has to start talking about it more," she said.

Cooper said she thought some people misinterpreted the meaning of the race and thought it was only for athletes or those who could run to all the challenges.

"Next year, I think we can incorporate different things so everyone can feel that there's something in there they can do," she said.

Molly and Megan Hoss use a map of the K-State campus to plan a path to their final activities.

Becky Schippers, graduate teaching assistant in statistics, and Mike Bennett, graduate student in kinesiology, won the race.

Combined, Schippers and Bennett said they have about 30 years of experience at K-State.

After strategizing during one of their penalties, Schippers and Bennett finished the race in one hour and 13 minutes.

"We made a big circle around campus and didn't backtrack," Schippers said.

Both Schippers and Bennett run marathons, but Saturday's event was a new opportunity for the team to mentally and physically compete while having a good time.

"This was fun," Bennett said. "There was a lot of sprinting, starting and stopping. I hope there are a lot more people next time."

scholarship, went to Gengler. Reusser received third place and a $750 scholarship.

Fourth place went to Bird, who was awarded a $500 scholarship.

The fifth-place prize, given to Feldkamp, was tickets to Country Stampede and a picnic for 30. The sixth-place prize went to Schulte, who received the Dr. Pepper Sports Nut package featuring a new 10-speed bicycle.

The fifth- and sixth-place finishers also received the new Motorola Razr cellular phone.

Roberts, a fourth-year caller for the event, said she was shocked to hear she won the Teletruck.

"I definitely didn't think it'd be me who won it," she said. "Now it'll make Telefund something to be even more proud of."

Roberts' parents traveled from Topeka to attend the ceremony. Her mother, Jody Roberts, said she also did not expect her daughter to win the truck.

"We are thrilled," she said. "Telefund has been so good for (Stephanie)."

After announcing the winners, Michael Dove, Wichita Area Big Wheels member, reminded everyone present that "in reality, Telefund makes everyone at K-State a winner."

an apparent injury during the weekend practice, but Prince would not discuss the extent of the injury.

"I don't even talk about those kinds of things," Prince said in response to post-practice questions.

One of the more experienced-laden positions is that of wide receiver.

K-State has the three returning leaders on the receiving corps from last year in seniors Yamon Figurs and Jermaine Moreira and junior Jordy Nelson.

Nelson said the trio of wideouts, along with all other receivers, has shown vast improvements in the last two weeks, and he said he feels they all are ready to take the next step in preparing for the season.

"We are all getting closer to making it a feel thing rather than a thinking process," Nelson said. "We can see on the field and on film that there are less mistakes, and the coaches are really confident in what we are doing. They compliment us a lot after practice and let us know that we are getting to where we need to be.

"It's getting to that point where we can just hear the play and go do it instead of hear the play, then think and then go do it."

SHOWCASE | Wecker: Game displays state talent

and Missouri State-legend Jackie Stiles coached the College Legends team.

Along with showcasing their basketball talents in a 125-69 College Legends win, the former Wildcats signed autographs and met with fans. Wecker and Koehn also competed in a "Hot Shots" duel and a three-point shooting contest, respectively, at halftime.

"I don't know that I shot it that well, so I got lucky there," said Koehn, who hit 21-of-25 3-pointers in the contest.

Freshmen Shalee Lehning, Danielle Zanotti, Marlies Gipson and JoAnn Hamlin and sophomore Kimberly Dietz were present to cheer on McFarland.

"It was a lot of fun," McFarland said. "I remember last year when we came out and watched them. Every time I scored, they cheered for me, and playing with Kendra and Laurie again was fun."

Lehning, Gipson and Hamlin all participated in last year's exhibition game.

Incoming K-State freshmen Kari Kincaid of Andover Central High School and Ashley Sweat of McPherson High School were scheduled to play in the Women's Basketball Showcase but were no-shows for the game.

In the first half, Koehn led the Legends to a 59-28 lead at the break with 18 points. She hit 4-of-7 from the three-point line and finished with 35 points and nine total 3-pointers, one of which came from beyond the out-of-bounds line.

McFarland got into the scoring act in the second half with 18 of her 24 points, including two 3-pointers that brought a smile from Koehn and her current teammates to their feet.

"I thought it was great," said Koehn, who plays for the WNBA's Washington Mystics. "It was fun to see her go 2-of-2 from three, and I think she had fun like we did last year."

Wecker finished with 18 points on 8-of-18 shooting.

Although the game was an exhibition, Wecker said it shows the level of talent in women's basketball in Kansas.

"It's just getting better," Wecker said. "The quality of basketball in the state is maintaining at a pretty high level. It's something that we get people out here to watch and get little girls interested in playing."

BASEBALL | Sweep proves a learning experience

3-3 in the fifth, but K-State responded with four runs in the bottom of the inning. Rumler's two-out double drove in two runs and gave the Wildcats a 7-3 lead.

The Longhorns answered with four runs in the top of the sixth to tie the game at 7-7.

Junior Jared Goedert's solo home run in the eighth gave K-State an 8-7 lead, but Kainer erased that lead with an RBI single in the bottom of the inning.

Kainer was a Cat killer throughout the series, notching 11 hits in 15 at-bats and driving in nine runs.

"Kainer's a great hitter," Hill said. "He's a clutch hitter. He's not the guy we wanted to see in the last inning."

Despite the loss, Goedert said the Wildcats learned what it takes to beat an upper-echelon team.

"We've just got to have this type of approach every day," he said. "They're a good team, but there's no reason they should sweep us, especially at home."

Texas was in position for a series sweep after beating K-State 7-2 and 10-2 in Saturday's doubleheader.

In the first game, Texas hit four home runs off K-State's starting pitcher, sophomore Brad Hutt, keeping K-State scoreless until the ninth inning. Hutt (5-1) gave up 11 hits and six runs in seven innings and was saddled with his first loss of the season.

In the second game, the Longhorns used small-ball to break open a 2-2 game in the seventh. After an infield single to open the inning, Texas laid down four consecutive bunts. The Wildcats were able to convert only one of the bunts into an out, which set the stage for Kainer's two-run double.

After dropping all three games against Texas, K-State will take a five-game losing streak into its April 11 matchup at Creighton.

Goedert said the formula for snapping the losing skid is relatively simple.

"We've just got to have focused at-bats. We've got to focus every pitch on defense," Goedert said.

drove up, and my girlfriend and her parents flew in to watch me play this weekend. They are all really happy for me, and it was good to win it in front of them."

With his performance, Kern also set K-State's all-time 54-hole score record, one previously held by former Wildcat Matt Van Cleave, who shot a three-round total of 202 at the Purina Classic in October 2003.

Kern held off Arizona's Henry Liaw, who placed second with an 11-under 202 (66-69-67), and Brian Prouty, who took third with an eight-under 205 (70-68-67).

Kern's score led K-State to a tie for third place with a three-round total of 17-under 835.

The team score ranks second on the school's lowest all-time 54-hole score list and is the lowest total for the Wildcats this season.

K-State senior Tyler Cummins tied for 19th with a one-under 212 (75-67-70), and freshman Robert Streb placed 28th with a one-over 214 (74-69-71). Freshman Joe Kinney took 44th, carding a four-over 218 (70-77-71), and sophomore Kyle Yonke tied for 56th with an eight-over 221 (74-70-77).

Coach Tim Norris said he is pleased with the performance but understands there is more golf to be played this season.

"This is a plus at this stage of the year," Norris said in a release. "I don't think this is an overachievement by the team or by Ben. We can celebrate this one for a little bit, but we will have a tough tournament next weekend."

Blood drive ends short of goal

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Last week's blood drive fell slightly short of its goal, said Kristi Reif, donor recruitment representative for the American Red Cross.

"We didn't make our goal, but we came really close," she said. "Everyone really came in toward the end of the week."

The goal for the blood drive was 800 pints, and the final total was 761 pints, leaving the American Red Cross short 39 pints. However, the blood taken could save as many as 2,283 lives, Reif said.

Reif said the influx of first-time donors, 208, was important to the drive.

One factor in the success of the blood drive was an article that was printed in the Collegian on April 5, Reif said.

"The students came in after the article was published," she said. "It definitely helped. We saw a lot of improvement in the numbers after that."

Several greek houses helped with the blood drive, Reif said. The Phi Gamma Delta house was a major contributor, as the blood drive is one of their philanthropy projects.

Colby Greer, senior in kinesiology, was a volunteer from the Fiji house.

"In the last five to six years, the house has worked with the American Red Cross," he said. "The house always tries to support by either volunteering or giving blood or both."

Greer said giving blood is important to him.

"The satisfaction of volunteering and knowing that you're helping someone who needs it is amazing," he said. "You know that you've helped someone else who needed the blood more than you."

Ben Cook, freshman in pre-professional secondary education, said he learned about the blood drive a few different ways.

"I saw the article in the Collegian," he said. "I also saw things posted in the hallways about the types of blood needed. I had the blood type needed so I went in."

Reif said for next year, the American Red Cross is going to implement educational programs to get donors to help.

"We want to get more students involved," she said. "We want to create more programs to educate donors about the importance of donating."

K-State students organize, participate in rallies against proposed immigration reform policy

By Lacey D. Mackey

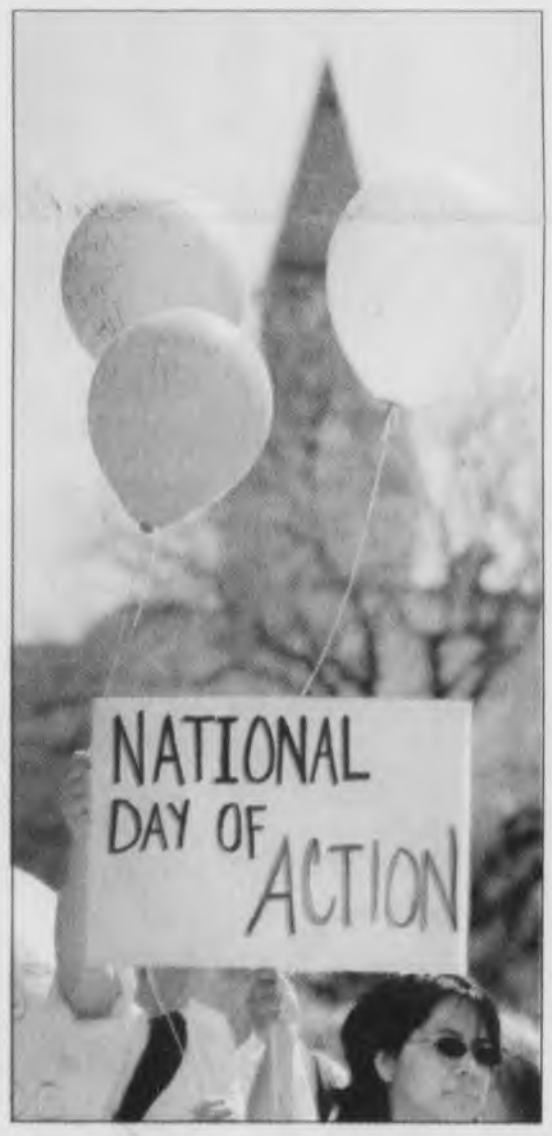
Voices echoed out in the Bosco Student Plaza with the phrase "Sí, se puede," Spanish for "Yes, they can."

Signs with the phrases "Diversity in action" and "Freedom is colorblind" were thrust into the air as a group circled outside of the K-State Student Union.

K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents joined together on K-State's campus Monday in accordance with a nationwide day of protest to raise awareness and encourage the change of national immigration issues through an Immigration Reform Rally.



K-State students helped organize the rally to address and educate people about the Border, Protection, Anti-terrorism and Illegal Immigration Control Act of 2005, H.R. 4437, which would increase enforcement of immigration laws and enhance border control.

One of the student organizers of the event, Clemente Jaquez-Herrera, junior in architecture, said he heard a national day of rallying would be on April 10 and wanted K-State students and faculty to be involved.

Jaquez-Herrera said he hoped the rally would bring awareness to K-State.

"Immigrants are like anybody, looking for a better life, a successful life," he said. "We want to become a part of that."

Thousands join protests across Kansas

WICHITA – Thousands of Hispanics across Kansas closed their businesses, walked off jobs and skipped classes Monday to join nationwide demonstrations in support of immigration rights.

In Garden City, about 3,000 supporters carried signs urging rights for immigrants. In Emporia, some Hispanic businesses closed down for the day to march in demonstrations. In Topeka, they gathered at the statehouse. In Wichita, a throng of nearly 4,000 protesters spanned several downtown blocks as they marched from city hall and through the city's downtown.

Among them was Meriam Janet, 25, who came with her 4-year-old son, Jesús. She works as a cleaning woman in Wichita and has been living in the United States illegally for 10 years.

She said she wants to be able to get a work visa, and hoped something good came out of the rally.

"We don't come here to take anybody's job," Janet said in Spanish. "We come to do the work that others can't or wouldn't do."

Demonstrators waved U.S. and Mexican flags, carried signs, sang the Star Spangled Banner and

Tuition legislation would return money to colleges

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Legislation that would allow Kansas Board of Regents universities keep tuition interest earnings is currently on Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' desk.

The Kansas Senate approved the proposal on March 31 and the Kansas House approved it on March 30.

Michael Burns, former student body president, said the money will go toward deferred maintenance at each regents university beginning in fiscal year 2008, or July 1, 2007.

K-State currently has $209.4 million in deferred maintenance, according to the regents Web site.

Deferred maintenance is the amount of money it takes to care for facilities at the regent universities, which includes buildings, classrooms and utility infrastructures, Burns said.

Bruce Shubert, associate vice president for administration and finance, said the money is not available until fiscal year 2008 because of the wording in the legislation.

Burns said the reserve account money comes from money that students pay for tuition.

"Those tuition accounts accrue revenue, and that revenue is currently going back to the state general fund to take care of highways and social services," he said.

Burns said Kansas technical institutions and community colleges have tuition ownership.

"This just extends it to the six universities," Burns said of the proposal. "It goes back to the philosophy that the regent institutions are actually owned by the state of Kansas and so that extends out that if they're owned by state and state is earning that money, the state should be able to retain those earnings."

Burns said the Students' Advisory Committee has lobbied for tuition ownership at Higher Education Day in the past.

The Students' Advisory Committee was established by state statute in 1975, and consists of the student body president from each regents institution, according to the regents Web site.

"The Board of Regents and their staff really took the lead on this and each of the universities, including the student governments, continued to contact each of their legislators," Burns said.

The proposal was championed in the Kansas Senate by Senate President Stephen Morris, R-Hugoton; Sen. Dwayne Umbarger, R-Thayer; and Sen. Jim Barone, D-Frontenac, according to a news release from the Kansas Board of Regents.

Student Body President Lucas Maddy said the money is important to K-State's future.

"This is important because it allows students increased control over the management of their educational investment and encourages budget accountability," Maddy said.

TOPEKA — Kansas officials hope to begin planning an Interstate 70 renovation that could cost $100 million or more. The section in question is an elevated stretch of highway that runs through the city north of downtown. City officials have communicated with the offices of Senators Brownback and Roberts as well as Representative Jim Ryun in hopes of getting up to $500,000 in federal funds for planning.

Bush speaks out

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Bush said Monday that he declassified sensitive prewar intelligence on Iraq back in 2003 to counter critics who claimed the administration had exaggerated the nuclear threat posed by Saddam Hussein. "I wanted people to see the truth and thought it made sense for people to see the truth," Bush said during an appearance at Johns Hopkins University.

U.S. soldiers resume post

BAGHDAD, Iraq — American soldiers have resumed patrol of dangerous neighborhoods in western Baghdad that had formerly been the responsibility of Iraqi forces. The U.S. military has refocused its mission on the heels of the difficulty that Iraqi troops have faced in controlling violence between Sunni and Shiite forces.

Q. What is your duty position?
A. I am the acting executive officer for Alpha Company 2-137th Infantry. I am the number two man for the company.

Q. What do you do over here? What is your job?
A. I am the jack-of-all-trades and master of none. My duties include being responsible for all logistics, equipment, and whatever the commanding officer tells me I'm in charge of doing.

Q. What did you think about when you found out your unit was being deployed to Iraq?
A. I had a lot of mixed feelings when I first heard about the deployment. I was a little bit relieved to finally get the call. So many other soldiers had already put their time in overseas and had started doing multiple rotations, while I had still not gone. So it felt good to finally put my time in.

On the other hand, as a leader I knew that at some point during the deployment I might lose one of my men. That is one of the biggest fears of anyone in the military. Wondering if someone you're in charge of is going to get killed because you weren't hard enough on them or didn't teach them well enough, and even if you did all of those things you may still lose them. That is a very hard thing to think about and something like that is always on your mind.

Q. Besides your family, what do you miss the Greek Olympics promote unity among fraternities, sororities

By Kelsey Noel
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Members of fraternities and sororities gathered at Memorial Stadium to participate in Greek Olympic games Monday.

The event was the first of this year's Greek Week activities, which also will feature Greek Idol, The Price is Right and other festivities.

Order of Omega Honor Society began the evening by serving free Call Hall ice cream.

Paige Tibbetts, senior in mass communications, serves as the outgoing vice president for the organization.

"We are doing this to try to be a part of the greek experience and unity this week," she said. "This week we are putting ourselves out there in the greek community more than we have in the past to promote scholarship, leadership and goals."

The competitions during the evening included limbo, five-legged races, blanket races, relay races, and tricycle races.

Rachel Strouts, junior in bakery science and management and director of the Greek Week steering committee, said the main responsibility of committee members was to plan Greek Week events.

"Our main job today was to facilitate the games," Strouts said.

Members of the greek community were allowed to volunteer to participate in games to represent their organization.

Steven Doll | COLLEGIAN

Gamma Phi Beta member Whitney Wear, freshman in pre-psychology, slides under the limbo bar for her winning pass while competing in one of the events of Greek Olympics on Monday afternoon in Memorial Stadium.

Joe Schlatter, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, represented Phi Gamma Delta at the games.

"We have a limited squad today, so I'll do anything," he said.

Schlatter said the week benefits the greek community.

"It's important for everyone to get together and have a good time, and to learn about each other's groups," he said.

Whitney Wear, freshman in pre-psychology and member of Gamma Phi Beta, credited her experience in dance for her win in the limbo competition.

Strouts said Greek Week provides several opportunities for greek organizations to enjoy activities with each other.

"It's a week to celebrate friendships within the greek community," she said. "It gives people the chance to celebrate their own chapters as well as enjoy the presence of others," Strouts said.

38 faculty members to take sabbatical

By Kelsey Childress
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

This year there will be about 38 faculty members at K-State leaving on sabbatical for the 2006-07 academic year.

A sabbatical is a paid leave a faculty member can take to work on projects that cannot be finished while working at the university.

"The primary advantage is that without having to teach each week and provide service to the university, it's possible to carve out some uninterrupted time to think and work, and that is what professors are supposed to do at a research school, which KSU is," said Bonnie Lynn-Sherow, associate professor of history.

Lynn-Sherow is working on a book and will not teach for the entire year.

She will be leaving on sabbatical.

"The disadvantage is that if you need a whole year off to finish a project, you lose half your annual salary," Lynn-Sherow said.

"Obviously, if a professor goes on sabbatical, they are highly motivated to do their project because they are committed to their scholarship," Lynn-Sherow said.

Other professors, like Masaaki Mizuno, are completing research.

Mizuno, professor in the Department of Computing and Information Sciences, will be overseas for the fall 2006 semester.

"I will join the Automotive Platform Unit at Hitachi Laboratory in Japan," Mizuno said.

"They have just started a new project to develop a next generation 'drive by wire' automotive platform, which will replace traditional mechanical cables with electric cables connecting 40 or more computers to control various parts of automotive systems," Mizuno said.

However, not all who take a sabbatical are professors.

Patrick Pesci, director of the Hotel and Restaurant Management program, is taking leave for fall 2006.

Pesci's wife, Betsy Barrett, associate professor in hotel and restaurant management and dietetics, will be traveling with him to a few places around the world.

"We will visit universities in New Zealand and Australia that have hospitality programs," he said.

"We will meet with faculty in these countries and talk about articulation between classes.," Pesci said.

Australia is now the No. 1 study abroad location for KSU students, Pesci said.

He said they hope to get internship agreements set up so their students have an opportunity to do international internships.

"We want to visit internship sites so we can better understand what our students will be doing," Pesci said.

Mizuno said there are many benefits of taking a sabbatical.

There are also, however, many setbacks, including financial strain and time away from home.

"I will have an opportunity to work with industry-scale equipment," Mizuno said.

"(However), I will be away from family – my wife and a daughter – for one semester. This is the reason I did not apply for a full-year leave," Mizuno said.

High school students apply to multiple colleges

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Liz Yang, senior at Manhattan High School, applied to eight colleges to see what her options are.

"I applied to Kansas State University and the University of Kansas, and a lot of out-of-state colleges," Yang said. "I wanted to see which ones I could get into."

Most high school students who are aiming for the best universities now apply to as many as 12, according to a March 21 report in The New York Times.

The growth of the common application that colleges accept has contributed to the ease of applying to a large number of institutions, as well as an increase in the number of colleges that waive fees for online applications, according to the report.

Tony Wichmann, post-secondary counselor at Manhattan High School, said students have different levels of schools they apply to.

"Students have their reach schools, the ones they want to see if they can get into," Wichmann said. "And then they have their target and safety schools, which may be something like an in-state school, something more affordable."

There are other factors that lead students to apply to several schools.

Chris Martin, senior at Manhattan High School, said he applied to five colleges.

"A lot of the colleges I applied to had varied programs that I was interested in," Martin said.

Martin said he took classes in high school that he thought would prepare him the best for the colleges he was looking at.

"You should set your standards high so that you can be accepted to any school," Martin said.

Rhiannon Chubb, senior at Manhattan High School, applied to seven colleges. She said she is looking for a college that accepts Advanced Placement credits.

Anne Neilsen, senior at Wamego High School, said she applied to three schools.

"I knew I wanted a big school with a good engineering program," she said. "So I looked at all of the Big 12 schools and took a couple of campus visits."

Bobby Sultzer, senior at Wamego High School, said he applied to two colleges.

"I was looking at the best financial options, and chose K-State because it's in-state and has a good engineering program," Sultzer said.

Sultzer said the students who apply to many schools are smart because they're keeping their options open.

"If you only apply to one school and then don't get in, you're in trouble. Plus, it's not bad to overdo something," Sultzer said.

TO THE POINT

Governor should approve tuition proposal

A piece of legislation sitting on Gov. Kathleen Sebelius' desk would greatly affect Kansas Board of Regents universities.

The legislation would allow the six regents universities to acquire tuition-interest earnings that currently go to a state general fund to care for highways and other state modifications.

The proposal was approved by the Kansas Senate on March 31 and was approved by the Kansas House on March 30.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

The governor should sign the proposal without hesitation so regents universities can have access to money that is theirs.

Students pay thousands of dollars each year in tuition to attend K-State. Any money that accumulates in an interest reserve account should go back toward the university itself.

K-State currently has an access of $200 million in deferred maintenance, or money it takes to maintain buildings, classrooms and utility infrastructures.

K-State is in dire need of this money to fix broken pipes and outdated desks, among other things.

While the money in the tuition-interest earnings account would not pay for the backlog in its entirety, it would make a difference in providing better classrooms and infrastructures at K-State.

Sebelius should sign the legislation and do what is best for Kansas and its regents schools.

Hail to the chief

Electing a female president would break barriers

JACI BOYDSTON

A strange new wind is blowing through our political landscape these days, one that makes some leap for joy and others cringe with discomfort.

You could say it started back in 2000, when the people of New York elected Hillary Rodham Clinton to the U.S. Senate, or you could say it started in 1984, when Geraldine Ferraro won the Democratic vice presidential nomination. You could even say it started in 1920, when women were officially given the right to vote.

However we look at it, for the first time in history, it is possible that one or both of the major parties will nominate a woman to run in the 2008 presidential election.

Although the sheer number of public opinion polls this early in the game is almost too staggering to sift through, a good chunk of those polls indicate that many Democrats like Hillary Clinton in 2008 and many Republicans like Condoleezza Rice. According to an analysis of most major polls on Wikipedia.org, Clinton and Rice appear to be the frontrunners for their respective parties' nominations.

To briefly put this in perspective, neither woman has announced intentions to seek the presidency (although, this early in the election cycle, very few people have).

Furthermore, public opinion and the political climate are bound to change markedly in the next two years, so peering into a crystal ball in 2006 doesn't do much good.

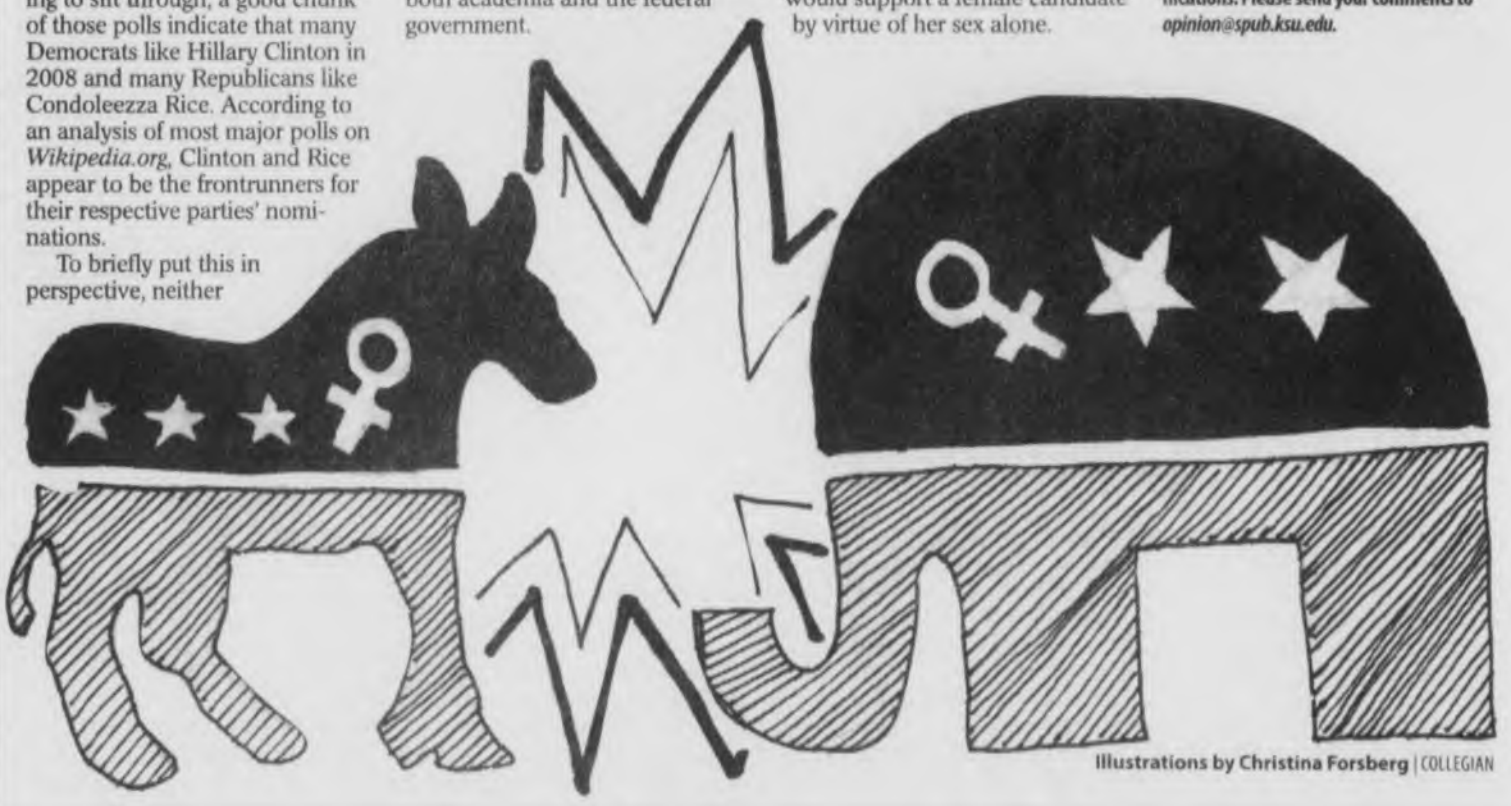
Regardless, the fact that two women are among the most-mentioned potential candidates for president is a pretty new and exciting thing.

Although I don't claim to be a feminist, I'm eager for the possibility of watching these two women face off in a national campaign. They're both qualified: Clinton is a U.S. Senator and a graduate of the country's most prestigious law school, and Rice has held a variety of prominent positions in both academia and the federal government.

Out of these two women, I don't know who would make the better president, but I hope that if one of them is nominated, the other will be, too. Although America may be ready for a female president, it might not be ready for a man verses woman presidential campaign.

If Clinton takes on a male Republican, or if Rice runs against a male Democrat, the odds are pretty good that the campaign will be reduced to a debate over whether a woman can run the country. There's a healthy bloc of voters (many of them the same old, rich, white men who already run the country) who would vote for any man over any woman, just because they don't think women are up to the job.

In the same vein, one need only visit thewhitehouseproject.org to see how many people want a woman president so badly they would support a female candidate by virtue of her sex alone.



Gender is a bad way to determine who would make the best president, and until we reach a point where no one even considers gender as a qualifier for good leadership, it would probably be best that there's no man-against-woman campaign.

That's the best part of Clinton vs. Rice in 2008 – both are qualified, capable candidates, and one would become the first woman president. And, after the country has gotten over that milestone, the question of whether women are qualified would be a much smaller issue in future campaigns.

So, although neither woman has announced an intention to run yet, I hope both of them do. It would be an interesting, groundbreaking campaign.

Better them than Oprah.

Immigration serves as a diversionary issue

JONAS HOGG

Immigration in the news. Oh, help, evolution, the two-party system and immigration. Surely somewhere there are radishes engaged in something of more intelligence.

If perception serves, immigration is not an issue of importance, at least no more than it was a year ago, five years ago or 10 ago. It seems, then, that immigration has become an issue because the politicians wanted one, and the cable networks obliged.

We are apparently to believe that immigration is a problem, although we are not told whose problem it may be.

Having spent much time in New Mexico it does not seem that New Mexicans view immigration as an ill. Spanish is spoken widely, which I am told should be offensive (although Spanish-speakers do not seem to mind that I speak English). There are the standard problems of poverty and violence that one would expect to find in Maine, Alaska or Saskatchewan.

The idea that immigration is a burden is new to them. Though Congress has obviously given it thought.

The U.S. House of Representatives passed a bill in December that would define illegal aliens as felons and mandate the construction of a 700-mile fence along the Mexican border to deter immigration. Have these oafs any bearing on reality at all?

Perhaps it should be guarded by unicorns, maybe talking cabbages. Fantasyland solutions should not be half-assed, after all.

The Senate "guest-worker" program seems logical; with the caveat that bureaucracy will not solve problems bureaucracy creates.

No one, though, has ventured a guess as to why this has become such a burning issue. In recent news, the Iraq war sours, the economy declines, corruption runs like water through our nation's capital, our president approaches censure – yet none of this receives the flash and dalliance of immigration. When, at last estimate, immigration to America has not been a fresh story since, say, 1492.

But, now that it is laid before us, what do we make of immigration?

The standard arguments follow: national security, territorial sovereignty, economic burdens, unfair competition.

National security and territorial sovereignty may be viable issues, though I have not yet heard of Mexican terrorists, and many immigrants are politically and socially active both here and in their native country.

Economic burdens are often cited, yet numbers to substantiate the claim are lacking. Migrant workers spend money, create capital, open businesses, work and generate tax revenues. This is burdensome?

Unfair competition, or "they're here to take our jobs," is a loud claim. Have you any acquaintances who have lost jobs to migrant workers? Do you know anyone who knows of someone who has?

A recent Associated Press story spoke of workers who traverse the swamps of south Florida, in summer, looking for saw palmetto. The workers were Honduran, Mexican, Panamanian – no Americans of any sort were to be found.

If migrant workers are willing to perform difficult labor for lower wages it seems the free market is acting as it should. Nothing prevents our native-born poor from seeking employment in the same manner except reliance upon the welfare state. Perhaps the slothful simply resent the industrious.

As far as the intelligent can tell, the immigration debate is diversionary. Real problems exist and worsen every day. Immigration is not one of them but is a convenient scapegoat and allows Congress to avoid action on matter of substance.

The unwashed clamor over imaginary problems, snarling patriots woof at the border while the nation sinks into decay.

Dean of the College of Engineering Terry King will leave K-State this summer to become the provost and vice-president of academic affairs at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind.

Dean to take new job

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Terry King, dean of the College of Engineering, will be leaving his post at K-State this summer to receive the new title of provost and vice president for academic affairs at Ball State University in Muncie, Ind.

While King said he loved working in K-State's College of Engineering, he is also excited about the opportunity to experience academic cultures in different areas of study.

"Change is always interesting and exciting," he said. "I wasn't looking for it, and it arose. It will have different challenges, I'm sure, but it's exciting. I'm looking forward to learning about those new things."

When he came to K-State, King said it was an opportunity to work with good, solid students and faculty.

"I wanted to facilitate in the faculty culture, learning instead of just teaching," King said. "We wanted to help adults learn."

King said a few of his desires for the College of Engineering included an enhancement of the research within the college and an increase of philanthropic support.

To help make these goals a reality, a team of professionals was hired to help bring resources into the college as well as engaging the department heads in the various processes.

An increase in giving has been noted annually, and King said he thought the college had been successful in that area.

Richard Gallagher, associate dean and professor in the College of Engineering, worked with King during his term and said King has worked hard to give students and faculty resources for the future.

"I view Dean King as being very visionary," he said. "He has created engineering education for the future and the best use of our technology that provides for our success in graduates."

Through King, Gallagher said a support system of faculty has resulted as well as a strong, fully accredited program.

"I think we will miss his congenial attitude," Gallagher said. "He is a very positive individual and tends to bring out the positive in his faculty and colleagues."

Maureen Lockhart, King's administrative assistant, has worked with King since he accepted the position of dean in 1997.

"He's so productive and efficient," she said. "He's very ambitious. He's so smart and has so much potential. I knew he would go places."

During his term, Lockhart said she and the rest of the college have enjoyed having King as part of the college.

"It's all been positive," she said. "We've enjoyed working for him and with him."

As dean, each day is different, but King said each one includes a lot of day-to-day management.

King said much of his job is to help lead and look toward the future of the college.

Now looking at K-State's future without him, King said he hopes the university and the College of Engineering will stay on the path that led to success.

"I certainly want to see K-State improving," King said.

Will he miss the K-State family?

"This is a very hard place to leave," King said. "It's wonderfully friendly from top to bottom."

TO THE EDITOR

Clean Air Manhattan supported by sorority

Editor,

Clean Air Manhattan is a coalition that recognizes the importance of educating the community on the dangers of secondhand smoke and encouraging the passage of legislation promoting smoke-free environments. On the university level, Students for Clean Air Manhattan (SCAM) was started.

The primary purpose for writing this letter is to commend the amazing members of Pi Beta Phi Sorority. After a Clean Air Manhattan Coalition Member spoke at their chapter house on the dangers of secondhand smoke and the benefits of smoke-free environments, many members in this sorority have taken a proactive role in promoting this worthy cause.

For instance, 152 members agreed to support Clean Air Manhattan from this sorority alone. I want to personally commend the K-State Chapter of Pi Beta Phi. Your involvement in this community effort is appreciated. You and many others are actively promoting smoke-free legislation in Manhattan.

After all, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, secondhand smoke does contain 4,000 chemicals, 50 of which are known cancer-causing agents. Furthermore, the CDC finds that secondhand smoke is associated with an increased risk for lung cancer and coronary heart disease in nonsmoking adults.

There is no safe level of secondhand smoke exposure. Thankfully, there are university students like those in Pi Beta Phi who want to do something. Manhattan is your community as well and your home for at least four years.

If you want information on Students for Clean Air Manhattan, please contact Carol Kennedy at Lafene Health Center at 532-6595 or myself by e-mail at dnbutler@ksu.edu.

Writer's claims on morning-after pill false

Editor,

Once again student's have been subjected to misinformation by the pro-abortion noise machine.

In Kelsey Childress' failing attempt to defend moral relativism, she ominously claims the "morning after pill" does not cause the destruction of a human life.

Well, if Kelsey was gathering facts from somewhere other than the NOW Web site, she could have mentioned the basic fact of human embryology that life begins at conception.

Don't be bamboozled by this ongoing canard, the murder weapon of Kelsey's preference does in truth terminate a new pregnancy.

At yet another attempt for a coherent thought, Childress states the pill is rarely being used amongst women.

However a recent report of Planned Parenthood Federation of American showed an 83.5-percent increase in "emergency contraceptive clients."

I would hope for the sake of professional journalism, editors of this publication would fact check Childress' uneducated pretension.

Most people live their whole lives on their "BUTS." Our "BUTS" are those excuses that hold us back from doing the things we would like to or know we need to do in life. "I would like to get in shape 'BUT' I don't have the time, energy, patience, etc."

"Time To Stand" is a powerful presentation that outlines where our "BUTS" come from, why they control us, how to get off of them, and lastly how to encourage others to join us in STANDING. Baylor sweeps K-State 7-0, Simosa wins final home match against Missouri

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team's last home matches of the season were full of mixed results, splitting duel matches with Baylor and Missouri.

The Wildcats were overmatched by No. 8 Baylor, 7-0, on Saturday.

Losing to the Bears was not a surprise, but the lopsided outcome was a shocker, senior Jessica Simosa said.

"We were kind of expecting something like this to happen but maybe not so blunt," Simosa said.

The lone win for the Wildcats came at No. 2 doubles where sophomores Olga Klimova and Fernanda Da Valle defeated Daniela Covello and Iva Mihaylova 8-5.

In singles, Da Valle and freshman Katerina Kudlackova each won their first sets before dropping the next two sets.

"They had enough to make it interesting, but they didn't have enough to finish the job," coach Steve Bietau said.

Sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia was out of action Saturday, nursing an ankle injury.

Bietau said he wished he could have seen how the Wildcats stacked up against one of the nation's top teams with a healthy Kvaratskhelia.

"I think anybody who has players would love to see how they could do at full strength," Bietau said.

Still, K-State was able to send its lone senior, Simosa, out with a 5-2 win against Missouri on Sunday.

Several distractions resulted in rough play from the Wildcats, Bietau said.

"I thought our play was ragged at times, and I thought that we battled pretty hard, but there really wasn't any place that we played clean," Bietau said. "I don't know if that's because of Tamar being out, or senior day, or just the expectation that we were going to win."

The doubles point was clinched after Simosa and Kudlackova beat Erika Josbena and Amanda Pratzel, 8-6.

Changing location would benefit women's exhibition game

MATTHEW GIRARD

Sometimes you just have to admit you're wrong, especially when it has been in front of your face for an entire basketball season.

I can't say I was a bon-a-fide fan of women's college basketball before this season.

I thought it wasn't fun to watch because there were no crazy dunks or alley-oops, but the K-State women's basketball team proved to me that you don't need all the high-flying antics of men's basketball to enjoy a game.

The bottom line is, these girls can play.

After the fun of the Wildcats' run to a Women's National Invitation Tournament championship, I was eager to go and cover the Second Annual State of Kansas Women's Basketball Showcase at the Bicentennial Center in Salina, Kan., on Sunday.

I was eager because former Wildcat-greats and WNBA players Kendra Wecker and Laurie Koehn were playing in the exhibition game against the state's best high-school players.

As expected, it was a 125-69 blowout by the "Legends" and Koehn hit a 3-pointer from Manhattan. K-State freshmen Shalee Lehning, Marlies Gipson and JoAnn Hamlin and sophomore Kimberly Dietz were also in attendance cheering on the former Wildcats, signing almost as many autographs as the legends and helping to create a fun exhibition atmosphere.

But there was a problem.

Not enough people got to see the fancy passing of Wecker, the three-point shooting of Koehn and the other talented players, high school and college legends alike.

There might have been 300 people in the stands.

Salina and the Bicentennial Center were gracious hosts, but it would serve the event better to have the exhibition game at either Bramlage Coliseum or "East" Bramlage (Allen Fieldhouse, if you want to be a Jayhawk about it).

Just look at the following the Wildcats have at home and the increasing interest in the women's game at Kansas.

The whole idea of the exhibition game – from what I can tell – is to get more people interested in the women's game and to get younger girls on the basketball courts of Kansas.

There is a lot of women's talent in this state, and the exhibition game needs more exposure.

Just think, if K-State was able to fill Bramlage for the WNIT, then bringing back former players like Wecker, Koehn and Nicole Ohlde would cause a near-riot for tickets.

Also, it would give those high school all-stars a chance to play on their potential home floors and get the full experience of what it's like to play in front of a lot of people.

Salina is a central location and the exhibition game is only in its second year, but why not let these tremendously-talented players play on the biggest of stages in Kansas.

The change of location for the exhibition game could change the minds of a lot of people, like myself, about the women's game of basketball.

Golf places 5th, prepares for Big 12

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The women's golf team started in fifth place on the first day of competition, and held on to their placing to finish the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic in fifth on Monday in Norman, Okla.

The Cats finished behind Oklahoma State, Southern Methodist University, Texas and Nebraska with a 47-over-par 911.

Individually for K-State, sophomore Michelle Regan tied for 10th with a 7-over-par 223, sophomore Kali Quick tied for 14th with a 9-over-par 225 and junior Helene Robert tied for 39th with a 16-over-par 232. Junior Katy Heffel tied for 55th with a 20-over-par 236 and sophomore Hailey Mireles finished tied for 64th with a 22-over-par 238. Freshman Krista Nelson, who was competing as an individual, finished with a 41-over-par 257.

Coach Kristi Knight said the beginning of Monday's round was difficult.

"We left a few shots out there early," Knight said. "At times, things were really frustrating early in the round."

There were several reasons why the scores rose Monday, Knight said.

"When you get a tough day with tough hole locations and bad winds, it's hard to get the ball close to the hole," Knight said. "Eventually, the girls were able to settle in there and get it done."

The next tournament for the Wildcats will be the Big 12 Tournament on April 17-19 in Lincoln, Neb.

Knight said the team is optimistic going into the post season.

"We're going to take the positives from this tournament," Knight said.

Baseball looks to notch win against Creighton

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State at Creighton
When: 2:30 p.m. today
Where: CU Sports Complex, Omaha, Neb.
Radio: KMAN - AM 1350

The K-State Wildcats are looking for a little pick-me-up when they travel to Omaha, Neb., to take on the Creighton Blue Jays at 2:30 today at the CU Sports Complex.

The Wildcats (21-8, 2-7 Big 12 Conference) are coming off of a three-game series sweep by the No. 9 Texas Longhorns and are hoping to notch their third consecutive win against the No. 22 Blue Jays (20-8).

"It's just something where we are trying to get back on track," senior Brandon Farr said. "It was tough to lose, especially on Sunday."

Senior Barrett Rice said the Wildcats need to play an entire game against Creighton.

"We just have to play nine innings and not beat ourselves up when we get down by five runs," said Rice, who leads the team in hitting with a .447 batting average. "Hopefully, we can learn from this past weekend against Texas and play all nine innings."

The Blue Jays are 2-3 in their last five games and will play in their eighth consecutive home game when the Wildcats come to town.

Creighton is led by senior Zach Daeges and sophomore John Nowaczyk. Daeges is hitting .400 with 29 RBIs and Nowaczyk is batting .343 with 105 hits on the season.

Despite the Blue Jays leading the Missouri Valley Conference in batting with a .303 average and the pitching staff sitting in second place with a 3.40 ERA, Creighton has lost two straight to K-State and K-State leads the series 43-32-1.

Farr said defense will be a concern for the Wildcats.

"Defense is what has killed us," Farr said. "The games that we've won, our defense has been outstanding and the games that haven't been so close, our defense has really struggled."

Although K-State sits at the bottom of the Big 12 standings, the Wildcats are second in the league in hitting with a .325 batting average.

Senior Joe Roundy said a win could boost the Wildcat's confidence heading into the weekend matchup with Texas Tech.

"It's a chance to bounce back, and hopefully we'll go in and pound Creighton and get back on the winning track," Roundy said.

K-State utilized a balanced offensive attack to defeat BYU (2-0), Nebraska-Kearney (2-0), Arkansas (2-0), Wichita State (2-0) and a split with Creighton (1-1). The Wildcats were led by sophomore Rita Liliom with 32 kills and freshman Megan Kroeker with 21 kills and a .310 hitting percentage.

BKC | Texas' Aldridge reportedly leaving for NBA

AUSTIN, Texas — The Texas Longhorns will reportedly be without one of their leading scorers next season.

Aldridge

LaMarcus Aldridge, whose sophomore season ended with a disappointing performance in Texas' overtime loss to LSU in the NCAA Tournament's Elite Eight, has told teammates and the Longhorns coaching staff he will enter the NBA draft, three sources told The Dallas Morning News.

Aldridge is projected as a possible high first-round pick in the NBA draft — and ranks at No. 3 on ESPN Insider Chad Ford's Top 100 — but declined to discuss his future after Texas' loss.

"3121"

Album review by Mark Sibilla

As a critic, I try to remain objective while I review music.

Bias and expectations, however, are always present during the review process.

Many critics of Prince's 25th and newest album, "3121," expect the artist-formerly-known-as-an-unpronouncable-symbol to return to his past glories and career highs reached during the '80s with albums like "Dirty Mind" and "Purple Rain."

I think such expectations are a little unfair to Prince.

At 47, it is impressive that Prince is still making albums, playing all of his own instruments and touring.

I certainly don't expect him to try and change the face of popular music with each album he releases.

Rather, as "3121" shows, Prince is content to continually refine and retool his signature sound.

I expect Prince's songs to do one of two things: be so sexy and funky that I'd be willing to grind-dance with my own grandmother; or be so sensual and groovy that they would charm the Virgin Mary out of her robes.

The album finds Prince succeeding much more on the former type of songs than the latter.

The album opens with the title track, "3121."

It is a slice of spacy P-funk.

And it sounds as if Prince just stepped off of George Clinton's mothership.

The track also finds Prince resurrect his alter ego, Camille (who made "her" first appearance in Prince's album "Sign 'O' the Times").

This alter ego only adds to the surreal sound of a track about a party where guests wear Japanese robes and drink champagne "from a glass with chocolate handles."

"Lolita" finds Prince rejecting the impulses of cheating with a younger girl at the party.

Prince lays the story over a bed of bouncy synth hooks that harken back to some of the Purple One's best songs.

In fact, the first four songs sound as if they would fit perfectly alongside his greatest work.

"Te Amo Corazón" is a sultry Spanish-tinged track, which is just begging to be used on a make-out mix tape.

The second single, "Black Sweat," is a heavy funk number that reminds artists like The Neptunes and Outkast from whom they really got their sound.

"Incense and Candles" is another ballad. It doesn't, however, work as well as "Te Amo," due to an odd vocoder and an awkward rap in the middle of the song.

"Love" contains a great beat and two amazing synthesizer hooks, while "Satisfied" proves Prince to be the falsetto version of Barry White.

In "Fury," Prince combines excellent guitar solos with danceable beats, and it is the closest the album gets to pure Prince nirvana.

Interesting song fact: Prince played all the instruments and sang all the vocals.

During the next three tracks, all momentum created by "Fury" disappears.

"The Word" finds Prince ruining an excellent beat with awful lyrics.

"Beautiful, Loved and Blessed" and "The Dance" are two bland ballads, which are more soupy than sexy.

Prince does his best James Brown impersonation on "Get on the Boat," closing the album with a lively song.

It is drenched in Caribbean beats and a spectacular horn section led by Maceo Parker.

Ultimately, "3121" helps continue Prince's comeback in a solid fashion.

Though the album lags near the end, its best moments are simply stunning.

"3121" will probably not be remembered as one of Prince's greatest, but it is unabashedly a Prince album.

This album does the job I expect any Prince album to do – be fun, funky and utterly danceable.

Life should be appreciated, not taken for granted

CARL BROWN

In today's scientific world, we are always looking at microbes, DNA strings and other small things, which have made me think a little about us.

What if we are nothing more than a molecule or cell structure in a humanoid creature or nothing more than a lab experiment?

Each of us has our own thoughts and characteristics, which are just a small part of the bigger picture of life.

Since these traits of ours are influenced by others, why could it not be possible that we are just cells that are influenced by other cells?

Like cells, we meet other "cells," mate and begin families of cells.

This is ongoing just like red blood cells and even infections.

Some may disagree with this thought process, but keep asking "What if?"

Religion says we have to believe in some divine spirit on blind faith.

What if we are a part of this divine spirit, and we are nothing but thoughts or other organisms of this divine spirit?

As we grow old and are no longer needed in the "family," we die off much like the cells in our body only to be replaced by our children.

What if things like the movie "The Matrix" are true, that our lives are computer generated?

The people who are killed or robbed are really agents of this program or the humans that have escaped from the "Matrix," and they are fighting to free all mankind.

What about the story of "Horton Hears a Who!"?

I am not trying to put down any religion or other form of faith.

Since we have no idea if there is an afterlife, why would this train of thought not be possible?

We are told to believe on blind faith so why would something like this be any different?

Again this is just something to make us think a little, to appreciate our lives more, and to enhance our learning of the good things, whether they be literature, music, math or sciences.

The things that make our lives easier are things that we often take for granted.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Susan Alsop, junior in English, has a job this summer where she will entertain hundreds of people and answers questions about K-State. She is an orientation leader.

Orientation is a session that incoming freshman and their parents attend.

During these sessions, the new students enroll for the fall semester and learn more about what K-State has to offer, said Pat Bosco, dean of student life.

"There are 12 different sessions of orientation, and each day we enroll approximately 250 students," Bosco said.

The orientation leaders are K-State student leaders who welcome and inform the new students during the session, said Emily Lehning, assistant dean of New Student Services.

Lehning said the students submit applications in order to become an orientation leader.

Those students go through two competitive rounds of the selection process. During the process they participate in interviews.

The committee that selects the students is made of students and professionals, Lehning said.

Lehning said the students are expected to conduct small group sessions during orientation where the new students are given tips for on- and off-campus success.

They direct students around campus and interact with the students and their parents during the lunch break.

The leaders also decide on a theme for the K-State show, where they will perform skits for the students, Lehning said.

Alsop, who was an orientation leader last year, said she likes performing in the K-State show because it's a nice way to break up some of the sessions.

"It's really exciting to perform in front of large groups," she said. "And it also gives the students a chance to see the different sides of the leaders. We can be goofy while still giving them information."

Alsop said she wanted to be an orientation leader because it is a way to stay involved on campus and meet new students.

Emily Besler, senior in political science, was also an orientation leader last year.

She said she wanted to be a leader again because it's a great opportunity to interact with students coming to K-State.

"It's fun to watch the students go through the process and to help them work through the emotions," Besler said.

Lehning said the qualities the committee looks for when choosing orientation leaders are students who have a variety of backgrounds, as far as majors and leadership experiences.

"Our ideal student is someone (who) performs well academically and is involved in campus life," Lehning said.

To prepare for orientation, the leaders meet twice during the spring semester. They go through a training period for two-and-a-half weeks in May, Lehning said.

Having students as leaders during summer orientation is exclusive to K-State, Bosco said.

"The K-State program serves as an incredible model for other colleges and universities," Bosco said.

"Most have professionals (who) communicate the policies and procedures," he said."

"To have actual students (who) have been selected to tell K-State stories to new students is a wonderful K-State tradition," Bosco said.

Technology helps national security

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Recognizing a terrorist can be a tough task, but new technology might allow authorities to determine the face of potential terrorists.

Akira Tokuhiro, associate professor of mechanical and nuclear engineering, is using computer imaging of facial expressions, part of a field known as biometrics, and robotic technology to measure the emotional implications of facial expressions and vocal tones.

Tokuhiro is able to take digital snapshots from several people and analyze them with his prototype software program. His program analyzes the expressions and compiles data to distinguish between basic expressions.

"Just by taking streams of video, we can guess what people are thinking," Tokuhiro said. "We currently use digital still images but will soon use digital video for analysis and program development."

He said the analysis of facial expressions and vocal attributes could have several applications in the real world.

The program with further development might detect changes in facial expression, changes in voice stress level and signs of insincerity, Tokuhiro said.

The most integral aspect of the program may be its ability to analyze responses to questions.

"Putting together the facial expressions and voice give us the ability to ask questions," he said. "A suspect could answer a question and the program will eventually be able to determine if the answers are consistent with the expressions."

Tokuhiro said the incorporation of his recognition program with the robotic arm could be helpful in detecting potential terrorists.

STATE OF EMOTION

Bill Dunn, professor in mechanical and nuclear engineering, has done research on improving the effectiveness of detecting deadly explosives.

His research focuses on physical signatures of improvised explosives, so Dunn said he plans to cooperate with Tokuhiro to evaluate the emotional state of suspects, not just the physical.

"Knowing how the operator of a device is feeling is important to any detection," Dunn said. "The technology kind of serves as an extension of the people."

Tokuhiro's research might also have applications in driver safety, allowing transportation officials to monitor the emotional state of drivers.

"You could potentially install a camera in the car along with a computer that would indicate if the driver is tired and unable to safely drive on the road," Tokuhiro said.

The project might have future applications in the treatment of voice-altering health problems, including detecting the thoughts of stroke victims who are unable to speak through their expressions. It might also help understand the thoughts and needs of autistic patients.

"In engineering, we tend to develop a lot of technology for people, so it makes sense to look at the state-of-mind of human beings," he said.

Tokuhiro's project is still in early stages, but he said he hopes students and faculty will get involved in this new research area.

"I'm not very familiar with the research, but it sounds like an interesting project that many students would want to be involved in," Steven Anderson, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said. "When I start my honors research, this sounds like a topic that I would like to investigate."

Walk to benefit American Heart Association

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The American Heart Association is having a Flint Hills Heart Walk April 22 at City Park.

The heart walk is a non-competitive fundraising event open to the general public, said Michelle Geering, regional director for the American Heart Association.

"Everyone knows someone who has been affected by heart disease, and this is a way to honor those people and also to take control of your own heart health," she said.

Geering said there is no registration fee, but participants are encouraged to give donations. All donations will benefit the American Heart Association.

Stephen Benton, professor of counseling and educational psychology, raised the highest individual amount of money for last year's walk after he collected $1,000 from colleagues, family and friends.

Benton said he was inspired to raise donations for the American Heart Association after his personal experience with heart problems. When Benton was 12, a doctor discovered a birth defect, which had caused the narrowing of his aorta.

The defect was corrected through surgery but an additional heart problem – a bicuspid aortic valve – was discovered. Today, Benton said he is able to live a normal life because of medication.

"Heart disease is so prevalent today, and there are just so many things people can do to prevent premature deaths," Benton said. "There are things we can do behaviorally and things we can do in terms of eating and exercise to help out."

Benton is leading a campaign at K-State to get people involved with the walk. He said he has organized K-State teams. Each team has a captain who is raising money for the heart walk.

"The money we are raising is going toward very important research," Benton said. "And this research directly benefits individuals with heart disease."

Scott Johnson, owner of Maximum Performance, 426 McCall Road, is acting as a co-chair for the heart walk.

"We are really trying to organize and get as many people as possible involved with the heart walk," Johnson said. "I also try and see where else can we get possible donations and possible sponsors."

One feature that was added to this year's heart walk is a fun run. Johnson said this was added in an effort to get more people involved.

"We thought it would spur some additional interest for the program," he said.

Johnson said managing a fitness center has given him insight into the importance of cardiovascular health.

"Heart disease is the number one cause of death in the nation and certainly that holds true in Riley County," he said. "And this is something we can help through diet and exercise. This is something you can do to prevent or help limit your risk."

New product boasts fresh bread technology

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A new type of sandwich is making its way to Manhattan.

John Dough products can be found at Ray's Apple Market 3011 Anderson Ave., and they will be on the shelves at Dara's convenient stores later this month.

John Dough is a stuffed sandwich with a new bread that keeps the bread fresh after being frozen and microwaved, said Darrell Holaday, president of Advanced Marketing Concepts.

"The dough of the sandwich is what makes it unique," Holaday said. "You can freeze the product and then later microwave it, and it still feels, smells and tastes like fresh bread."

The sandwich is offered in two breakfast flavors: Ham, egg and cheese, and sausage, egg and cheese. Hot and cold sandwiches are also available, including philly cheese steak, pepperoni pizza, seasoned barbeque beef, white chicken salad and the original bierock.

According to the John Dough Web site, the bierock sandwich originates from the creator of the dough, John Bernhardt.

When Bernhardt tried to mass produce of sandwiches, he learned the dough being used didn't stay fresh for long, according to the Web site.

This led Bernhardt to find a new bread that would allow the sandwich to be frozen, microwaved, or thawed without losing the freshness of the bread, according to the Web site.

Bernhardt contacted Holaday and Connie Fischer, vice president of marketing for Advanced Market Concepts, Holaday said.

Fadi Aramouni, professor of food science, conducted a focus group on the sandwiches to test the reactions of consumers.

Fischer said the technology used for the bread in the sandwiches is what makes the whole product.

"No one else has come up with the bread technology that we have," she said. "We have a more modified bread."

Now John Dough products are becoming available at convenient stores and grocery stores around the country.

Young Jones, dairy, bakery and frozen food manager at Ray's Apple Market, said samples have been given out at the store, and 25-30 cases of the sandwiches were sold.

"I think more days of handing out samples would let more of our customers know about them," Jones said. "About five days of the week is needed to cover the different varieties of customers that come in."

most from back home?
A. I miss my friends. When you're halfway around the world you can't be there when one of your buddies needs your help. You can't just pick up the phone and say hello. When your best friends get married or have their first child you can't be there to congratulate them.

Q. How is your family coping with your deployment?
A. As far as I know they are doing as well as expected. My wife has her good days and her bad days just like anyone else. Sometimes her letters are filled with sadness and sometimes they are filled with pride and excitement for my return. All in all I don't think that deployment is easy for anyone who knows and cares about someone who is over here.

Q. What do you do to pass time or unwind to keep your mind off of duty in a war zone?
A. Most of my unwind time is exercising. I try to physically push myself as hard as possible every day lifting weights and/or running. It is a good stress reliever, wears me down enough at night to sleep, and gets me in better shape.

Q. What has been your most memorable moment here?
A. Thus far it has been the Iraqi people. Seeing, speaking with, and working with them has opened up my eyes to the Middle Eastern culture and how completely different Iraq is from America. I can't give one specific thing but being here makes me appreciate everything I have back home and how good life is in the United States.

Q. Has your opinion about Iraq changed since you've been here?
A. Yes. Before coming here all I knew about Iraq is what the media chose to report and what some bureaucrat could recite from his two-day trip to Iraq. It is far more complex here than what most people imagine, and it is a slow process trying to bring peace and freedom to a country that has never known it.

Q. Do you think news coverage presents an accurate account of the Iraqi conflict?
A. No. Bad news is the only news that is shown to the public. The media either doesn't know or try to convey everything that is happening around the nation and the Middle East. They report that an IED blew up and four soldiers died today, and that's it. They don't talk about the services we provide here, the jobs we employ, the insurgents we capture, or the progress that the coalition forces have done here so far.

Q. Do you think the election process will work in Iraq and do you think Iraq will ever achieve some democratic form of government?
A. Yes. However, I don't think Iraq will achieve the same level or same democratic government that we have in the United States, at least not in the near future. There are too many differences between the American culture and Iraqi culture for them to have the exact same government system that we do. I truly believe that Iraq will have a democratic nation in the future as long as we don't give up too soon and don't let all that we have sacrificed so far go for nothing. Like it or not the coalition forces are past the point of no return. We have devoted too many lives, too much time and too many resources to give up. All of the people who have given their life and time for this deserve more than that.

Q. What are your experiences with the Iraqi people and how do they perceive you?
A. I have spoken with many people in the city on missions. Depending on which ethnic group and what class of person you speak with will depend on their views. Most of them think we are doing a good job here and all seem to want peace.

Q. Do you agree with all of the decisions President Bush made concerning Iraq?
A. (No response)

Q. Do you believe the pressure put on President Bush by the American people is fair, now that you are serving in Iraq?
A. I don't have a clear answer for this. I don't think Americans have the complete picture of everything that is going on here from the media, which is where most are basing their opinions. However, I do believe that Americans should have the right to express their opinion to the President.

Q. What is the morale of your troops and peers?
A. I believe the morale is high. Everyone wants to do their job and is putting forth the effort 100 percent.

Q. How do you feel about the drawdown of troops in Iraq?
A. I understand why they are doing it. I just hope it is not too many too fast from here. Most of my family and friends talk up the withdrawal of the troops thinking it will bring me home faster. I'm not sure that is the case, and even if it was I'm not sure that is what I want. Everyone here wants to get it right the first time. Most of us don't want to come back a second or third time, nor do we want to turn this into something our children and grandchildren are still fighting in. So as long as we are not throwing away all the progress made so far.

Q. When the United States pulls out of Iraq, do you think Iraq will remain an U.S. ally?
A. Yes. Because the majority of people here know why we came here and understand what we are trying to do. I believe that they also understand that being with the United States is much better than being against the United States.

Q. How has deployment changed your outlook on the future?
A. I've learned to appreciate what I have back home much more. I used to take for granted being able to kiss my wife goodbye in the morning before going to work or eating whatever food I wanted. Life in the United States is very good. Americans loose sight of that often or say they understand but unless you have lived in a place like Iraq for a long period of time you'll never fully understand.

Q. When this is over, will you think it was worth it?
A. Yes. I have never worked, lived, nor shared pain with anyone finer than the men in this battalion. I am proud of everything our country, the army and I have done here. This experience, no matter how bad it has been, has made me a better person and opened my eyes wide open to the importance of the life we live.

STATE | Several businesses close to let employees protest chanted "Sí se puede," or "Yes we can." Scrawled on the signs were slogans such as "We are not criminals," "We need to stop living in fear," "We pay taxes," among others.

Gabriel Soto, 35, brought his wife and three children to the rally. Soto, who works as a tree trimmer in Wichita, readily acknowledges he, too, is an undocumented worker living in the United States for 18 years. Two of his children were born in this country. He said the immigrant rallies were an opportunity to get Hispanics together and try to change immigration laws.

"All I do is work – and stay out of trouble," Soto said.

At the outskirts of the crowd, two demonstrators stood apart at the request of police, but were mostly unnoticed by the immigrant supporters. One carried a sign saying "Invading America is our civil right" and the other sign declared "Laws, we don't need stinking laws."

Gerry Domitrovic, a Wichita lawyer, said he came out because he felt at least one or two Americans should come out and say no to the immigrants.

"I should be playing golf instead of doing this," he said.

Other Hispanics showed up in support of their brethren.

Guadalupe Freeman, a U.S.-born citizen, clutched her Kansas driver's license as she and thousands of others marched in front of the Wichita offices of U.S. Sen. Pat Roberts. She said immigrants should be able to get a driver's license and other documentation to work.

In Topeka, hundreds of people crowded the south steps of the Statehouse for the city's pro-immigrant rally. Participants held signs that said, "We bring honor to America," and "We came to work in peace."

Tammy Guerrero, a Topeka teacher, came to the rally with her husband's six children, ages 8 to 15, all American citizens. Their father, Geraldo Ortiz, faces deportation, she said, even though he's lived in the United States for 17 years.

"After 17 years of paying taxes, shouldn't he be a citizen?" she said.

Jesús Rivera had both American and Mexican flags draped across his shoulders, and a pair of handcuffs dangling from his right arm. The 19-year-old works two jobs as a cook, and worries that he might be caught and deported.

Rivera and his family came to the United States from Juarez, Mexico, when he was only 10, because, "We wanted a better life."

"I love living here," he said. "I love America."

The impacts were felt in some meatpacking plants, where Hispanic workers comprise much of the work force.

Excel Corp., the nation's second-largest beef processor, said Monday the company noticed a slowdown in production at its plants in Dodge City and Schuyler, Neb., because of immigration rallies in those cities. The company declined to disclose exact attendance figures at those two plants, but said its other plants were unaffected.

"I wouldn't want to say how much production has been slowed, but it has been slowed. Definitely," said Excel spokesman Mark Klein.

Creekstone Farms Premium Beef shut down its Arkansas City plant Monday because management thought workers should be able to protest a U.S. House bill that would make it a felony to be an illegal immigrant and would build a fence along the U.S.-Mexico border. Three-fourths of the company's workers are Hispanic.

Tyson also closed its plant near Holcomb. Fewer than 10 of the more than 100 facilities the company owns were closed because of the potential absence of workers due to the immigration rallies and market conditions, said company spokesman Gary Mickelson.

In Garden City, a morning rally brought out an estimated 3,000 people.

About 20 percent of the students in Garden City schools were absent from classes Monday to attend the rally in that city, far above the 4 percent normal absentee rate, said Roy Cessna, spokesman for the district. About 60 percent of the more than 7,300 students in Garden City's public schools are Hispanic.

Donalda and Rony Martinez told The Garden City Telegram they brought their own four children and two other children to the Garden City rally after calling the schools to tell them they were taking them to the rally.

"I think it is important our children participate in this and understand what's happening," said Donalda Martinez.

The Kansas events came as Congress considers legislation on immigration reform and were part of a national day of action billed as a "campaign for immigrants' dignity."

— Associated Press reporter John Hannah contributed to this report.

Students march in protest of an immigration referendum Monday afternoon. About 100 people attended the rally.

PROTEST | Students call to thank lawmakers, ask for support

Instead of tightening consequences on illegal immigrants, Jaquez-Herrera said he hoped people would support an immigration reform bill, regulating immigration but being sensitive to the issue.

Organizers of the rally also encouraged people to call senators, thanking them for support and asking them not to support HR-4437.

Andrea Pardo, sophomore in architecture, was helping make phone calls and said speaking to lawmakers helped them connect the issue to people affected by it.

"I think it's really important for them to hear real voice," Pardo said. "If they hear, they might want to support us on this issue."

Johnella Holmes, operations manager and director of operations for Education and Personal Development and director of the Gearup program, said the rally's purpose was to raise awareness of the act and its impact on the country.

"What we're trying to do is make everyone aware of the law," she said. "We want Congress to know immigrants have rights and that they have dreams."

A large number of immigrants make up the population at K-State, said Laura Villalba, graduate student in modern languages and Spanish instructor, and the day was to help people realize the immigrants' influence in the lives of society.

"I think in some part, everybody is an immigrant, even Americans," she said. "We want to create an awareness of other cultures. We need to be accepting of each other."

Douglas Benson, professor of modern languages, said people might question why protests to the act had occurred.

"Some people have asked why we've rewarded people who break the law," Benson said. "We're rewarding ourselves and them for being a part of this country."

Throughout the years, Benson said immigrants have brought many important things to our country, namely their families.

"Most of us have no idea if our ancestors were legal," he said. "Immigrants have always brought to this country their energy, their skills and their families. They bring us so many things."

At one point in the rally, Benson said about 100 people were participating in the rally. Benson said the event was a calm but animated rally.

As he watched, students and faculty listened to speakers and walked around Bosco Student Plaza.

Dean of Student Life Pat Bosco said he was glad K-State participants saw the need to address the immigration discussion.

"I'm incredibly excited that faculty, staff and students are focused in on an incredibly important issue," he said. "This is what K-State is all about, helping bring focus to this very contemporary, important issue."

TENNIS | Knowledge of opponent's style led to win

Simosa and Kudlackova fought their way back from a 1-5 hole to win the match.

"We were waiting for the ball instead of going for the ball," Simosa said. "So we had to start going to the net and being more aggressive."

Kvaratskhelia played doubles but sat out singles, still not fully recovered from her injury.

However, she did have time to coach freshman Maria Perevoschikova in her No. 1 singles match.

"I asked the coaches if I could coach Maria because I had played (Yelena Olshanskaya) twice, and I knew what kind of player she was," Kvaratskhelia said.

Perevoschikova used Kvaratskhelia's knowledge to defeat Olshanskaya (6-1, 6-3).

"I am really proud of my baby," Kvaratskhelia said.

Simosa clinched the overall match, beating Lubica Nadasska (6-1,7-6).

"Its nice to win my last match at home and have a lot of friends there to watch me," Simosa said. "It was not easy, and it was kind of stressful during the second set, but you expect things to get tougher as the match goes on, and you just have to hold on."

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State greeks competed in a mock episode of "The Price is Right," last night in Forum Hall.

"It all started because we found the T-shirt designs online, and then it grew from there," said Brie Spencer, senior in marketing, Delta Delta Delta member and event coordinator.

The event was a philanthropy effort by the K-State greek community.

"We were all here to support the T. Russell Reitz Regional Animal Shelter in Manhattan," Spencer said. "Our preliminary estimate is that we have raised over $350 tonight for the shelter."

The show began with "The Price is Right" theme music playing and Kole Farney playing show announcer Rod Roddy. Farney, in a white sequined jacket, introduced the first contestants.

"I watched some clips of Rod Roddy in order to prepare for the show," said Farney, freshman in business administration pre-professional and FarmHouse member.

Students had to sign up before the game for a chance to be a contestant.

"I'm a little nervous I will get called, but it would be fun to go up there and win," said Brianne Leese, freshman in business marketing and Tri-Delt member. "I used to watch 'The Price is Right' when I was a kid but haven't seen it in the last three years, so I don't know any of the games."

Some audience members, however, did not sign up to be possible contestants.

"It's relieving not having to worry about going up there, but I am here cheering on the Barker's babe from our sorority," said Casey Babington, junior in hotel and restaurant management and Pi Beta Phi member.

Babington said the audience made the event entertaining.

"A lot of people have been screaming bad advice to the contestants, but we have been giving good advice all the time," Babington said.

Kate Zimmerman, freshman in biology, responds after guessing the wrong price during "The Price is Right." Zimmerman and Smith were the two winners during the evening's activities.

Blake Mackey, freshman in agricultural business and Alpha Gamma Rho member, competed in the event but did not make it to the final round.

"My teammates in the stands didn't help me too much. I was taking phone bids, though," Mackey said.

Mackey answered his phone while on the stand and took advice from other AGR members.

The "Showcase Showdown" ended in a tie after both contestants bid within $100 of the correct amount.

Kate Zimmerman, freshman in biology and Alpha Xi Delta member, was one of the two game show winners. Linzy Smith, the second winner, also is a member of Alpha Xi.

"We had discussed it and decided to split anything we won before the final round," said Smith, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management.

Together, the two women won a date party for Alpha Xi, a one night's stay at hotel and a free jet ski rental, among other prizes.

Nobel Prize winner to lecture Thursday

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Former president of Poland and Nobel Peace Prize winner Lech Walesa will deliver the 144th Landon Lecture at 2 p.m. Thursday in McCain Auditorium.

According to the Nobel Prize Web site, Walesa was an activist for workers' rights throughout the 1960s and 1970s, organizing strikes and non-communist trade unions. After the Gdansk shipyard strike in 1980, which Walesa led, the government was forced to give in to the demands of the workers and allow them to organize into unions.

Walesa was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1983, and continued to gain political clout by helping the establishment of a non-communist Polish government.

In 1989, according to the site, Walesa became the third person in history, after Marquis de Lafayette and Winston Churchill, to address a joint session of the U.S. Congress. He was elected to the Polish presidency in 1990 and served until 1995.

"I, for one, am very excited about him coming," said Thomas Jackson, marketing and development officer at McCain. "Because I grew up during the Reagan era, when he was extremely politically powerful, and my political viewpoints were kind of shaped

Library to use $72K allocation for software

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hale Library was allocated $72,000 by the student fee bond surplus review committee.

An amount of $33,000 was approved to fund the Google search appliance, and $39,000 was allocated for the implementation of SFX link resolving software.

Ashley Boldt, bond surplus committee member, said the search appliance will benefit K-State students since most use the library.

"We have a great library and just a huge amount of information," Boldt, senior in psychology, said. "The downside to that is that it can be really hard to find what you're looking for."

The Google search appliance is an Internet server that will be installed in Hale, Dale Askey, Web development librarian, said.

"It's like having all the power of Google, but you are the administrator and can control the content it indexes," Askey said.

The K-State libraries Web site consists of more than 5,000 HTML and other documents, both locally and remotely hosted, Askey said.

5-year tuition strategy outlined for Faculty Senate

By Holly Smith
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The five-year tuition strategy proposal was presented to Faculty Senate at its meeting Tuesday.

Michael Burns, former student body president, and Tyson Moore, Student Senate chair, presented to Faculty Senate members the findings of the Special Committee to Study Long-Term Tuition Strategies, which were released March 15.

"It's really important for students and parents and everyone else who pays for tuition to be able to predict tuition increase throughout their time here," Moore said.

Moore said the tuition plan will make K-State more attractive to non-resident students.

"I think we all realize that out-of-state students make K-State a lot more money than in-state students, and so trying to be more competitive in those markets will gain us revenue," he said.

Some of the principles outlined in the five-year plan had been changed or modified from the last five-year plan. These differences include maximizing the coordination of funding, focusing on improving the learning environment and investing in areas that will improve more than one area of focus, Burns said.

"We want to focus those initiatives that improve the learning environment for students and a teaching environment for faculty so the students get more out of their K-State experience," Burns said.

Moore said the new tuition plan will alleviate some confusion other tuition plans cause.

"There are a lot of plans at various institutions that are incredibly difficult to decipher," Moore said. "We have all of these specific college fees tacked for services, so the projected tuition published to everyone in the nation isn't necessarily what students will be paying.

"We wanted to make K-State a little different, and make it the K-State approach of keeping it simple."

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Immigration protests
DODGE CITY, Kan. — Several hundred workers briefly walked off the job at a Dodge City meatpacking plant Tuesday after company officials disciplined employees for missing work to protest proposed federal immigration laws a day earlier. Just before the lunch hour, about 600 workers left and filed into the Excel Corp. cafeteria, saying they would not work if the company sanctioned employees for attending Monday's immigration rally.

Iran enrichment goal
TEHRAN, Iran — Iran's hard-line president said Tuesday that the country "has joined the club of nuclear countries" by successfully enriching uranium for the first time — a key process in what Iran maintains is a peaceful energy program. The announcement from President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad was certain to heighten international tensions surrounding Iran's nuclear program.

Troops killed
BAGHDAD, Iraq — Bitter rivalry between two powerful clans for leadership of Iraq's Shiite Muslims snarled efforts Tuesday to agree on the next prime minister, the key issue that is blocking a national unity government. Meanwhile, the U.S. military reported the deaths of five more soldiers, including three killed Tuesday in a roadside bombing north of the capital. The latest casualties raised the U.S. death toll so far this month to at least 31.

Citizenship dilemma
More than six in 10 Americans say the government should allow illegal immigrants currently living in the United States to remain in the country and become U.S. citizens, "but only if they meet certain requirements over a period of time."

Minority recruitment addressed

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The multicultural student organizations, KSU Young Democrats and the KSU College Republicans met Tuesday night to discuss political action and how to work together.

Mark Nelson, political actions chair of the Black Student Union and sophomore in philosophy, opened by saying, "Resolution is the answer."

A question-and-answer session with Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy, student body president and vice president, respectively, was followed by questions from John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy, about the pair's plans to recruit minorities into organizations and Student Governing Association.

"We provide funding for groups and clubs that are going to be doing things," Lucas Maddy said. "We've seen more and more minority groups coming to campus."

Minorities' under-representation in SGA also was discussed, along with ideas of how to improve representation.

Jeff Smith, senior in political science and president of Young Democrats, and Brett King, sophomore in political science and vice president of College Republicans, were asked the same questions by Exdell.

Smith talked about the Young Democrats' relationship with the BSU, and said he hopes the two will work more closely in the future.

"As an organization, we can do better to find more close correspondence," Smith said.

King also discussed how he wants minorities to feel welcome at meetings of the College Republicans.

"We don't care what color, race, religion, you name it," King said. "If you agree on our conservative, Republican agenda, come on in."

When asked why a minority student would want to join Young Democrats, Smith said he thinks everyone has a voice.

"It's a question of equity," Smith said. "I've always been one to believe that Democrats were the voice of the voiceless."

Members of the audience had the chance to express concerns to the leaders present.

Rickey Frierson, senior in management, said not many steps toward inclusion have happened in the five years he has been at K-State.

"I feel like there's been a lot of talk and no action," Frierson said.

Exdell made a presentation about the concerns in New Orleans, La., and the emergency preparedness problems. He criticized President Bush's failure to fulfill promises to reconstruct New Orleans.

"There has been an effective policy of ethnic cleansing by failure to act," Exdell said.

Gerry Jones, a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, told the audience the NAACP is starting a Manhattan chapter.

"Our main thrust for this year is education," Jones said.

Legislators break for 3-week recess

By Logan C. Adams
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State students get a week off for their spring break. Kansas legislators get more than three.

The Kansas Legislature adjourned March 31, and its members will return April 26.

"My favorite school subject when I was a student – and a teacher," Rep. Tom Hawk, D-Manhattan, said of the recess.

Hawk said the recess allows lawmakers time to go home and spend time with their constituents. He said he was keeping current on what is happening with the bills passed before adjourning and talking with constituents.

"You have to do all the things you can't get done in Topeka," Hawk said.

The Legislature passed an $11.7 billion state budget before its adjournment, according to the Associated Press. The budget is not complete, though, because the Legislature needs to decide how much extra funding to send to schools.

Hawk said he also wants to work to restore the mentor program former K-State football coach Bill Snyder was supposed to lead, which was cut from the budget bill.

Rep. Sydney Carlin, D-Manhattan, also said she is enjoying her time off.

"It's a wonderful time," Carlin said. "I don't have to dress up every morning."

Carlin said committees are able to meet during the break, and bills can receive extra polishing. She said she and other lawmakers will watch the news to see which bills Gov. Kathleen Sebelius will sign into law.

"Nothing is certain, except what the governor has signed," Carlin said.

She said lawmakers aren't taking a long vacation with the recess, and they are using the time to interact with people in their districts and catch up on things they missed while in session.

Carlin said she plans to visit several schools and officials in her district during the break. She said she intends to travel to Chanute, Kan., to visit her mother before the Legislature goes back into session.

Carlin and Hawk said they want to see legislation passed to add tougher sentences for convicted child-sex offenders but were concerned since an addition to the bill would allow for the creation of privately-owned prisons in Kansas.

School financing will be an important issue this year, Hawk, Carlin and Sen. Roger Reitz, R-Manhattan, said. The Legislature has had trouble passing such legislation in previous years, and many expect the same this year, Reitz said.

Gubernatorial candidate Robin Jennison has made the issue an important component of his campaign.

The Legislature also will consider bills that would restrict the use of eminent domain for redevelopment projects.

Reitz said there will be trouble with whether to include a grandfather clause in the law to allow such condemnations that have already begun to go onto completion. He said the Kansas House version of the bill includes this clause.

Reitz said he has been using his time off to work as a physician in Manhattan, when he averages 16 patients a day. He said he's been making some trips to meet with residents to discuss current issues in government and has been hearing from constituents.

"I see various people from time to time from various walks of life who let me know," Reitz said.

Day's activities, readings unite Arts and Sciences

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mark Nelson, sophomore in philosophy, read four poems he wrote, and Amy Unsworth, graduate student in English, read a series of poems about her husband's deployment during the first-ever Arts and Sciences Day in the Bosco Student Plaza on Tuesday.

The day began with physics demonstrations and the Department of Political Science's voter registration.

"We sort of got the idea from Ag Week," said Adam Kretzer, senior in biochemistry and outgoing president of the Arts and Sciences College Council.

The College of Arts and Sciences is the largest college on the K-State campus, and many students do not feel a connection to each other like students in other colleges do, Kretzer said.

"Despite all our differences, there's a uniqueness to our college," he said.

The college hopes to have the event again next year and also to have a radio station in attendance, Kretzer said.

The Department of Modern Languages gave readings in different languages, Robert Corum, department head, said.

"We have over 20 countries represented in our faculty and staff," he said.

Corum read a French language translation of the text of Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have A Dream" speech, and Laura Villalba, graduate student in modern languages, read in Spanish from "Don Quixote."

The Spanish instructors come from such varied countries as Colombia, France, Mexico and the Czech Republic, Villalba said.

Nelson performed poems he wrote for a collection he called the Black Fly Series.

The individual poems were titled "History Lesson," "Phonology and Revolution," "The American Bird" and "I Am Me."

In "Phonology & Revolution," Nelson referred to "a man that told me I was once ugly and black."

"It was supposed to be symbolic of the conservative movement," Nelson said.

TO THE POINT

Lectures prompt international learning

The United States is not the only country with a leader, past or present.

However, the students who clamored for tickets to see President Bush speak are the same ones who probably have never heard of Lech Walesa.

At 2 p.m. Thursday, Walesa will present the 144th Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium. The Landon Lecture series is one of the most prestigious series, boasting Bush, Mikhail Gorbachev and Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan., as past lecturers all in the past year.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Although most students are unaware of who Walesa is, it should be enough that he is presenting a Landon Lecture to pique students' interest.

Here is a tidbit about Walesa: He was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1983.

All people should take time out of their pre-Easter schedules and spend a little time in McCain hearing what a world leader from a country much different than the United States has to say.

As important as Landon Lectures are to attend, it is equally important to hear the each speaker's message, as those messages broaden and shape students' views of the world outside K-State.

Also, once students leave the university, opportunities to see world leaders in this capacity decrease greatly.

So take advantage of the chance to see such a person here on Thursday and clamor again for the opportunity to glimpse another highly respected leader.

Judging Judas

Lost Gospel's message should not be ignored

KELSEY CHILDRESS

On April 6, the New York Times published an article stating that a "Gospel of Judas" has surfaced in the Egyptian desert. Judas, who is known from the Bible as the betrayer of Jesus, gave Jesus over to the authorities, an act that ultimately lead to Jesus' crucifixion.

However, the new text tells a different story: Judas was a co-conspirator with Jesus. Judas only turned Jesus in after Jesus asked him to. It also tells that Judas was Jesus' greatest supporter and closest confidant.

This 26-page text was written in Coptic and created in about 300 A.D. Historians and critics somewhat agree that this discovery will not significantly change the Bible or what people think of the story of Jesus.

This is simply preposterous.

We have discovered evidence that proves Jesus co-conspired with Judas to be crucified, yet it won't make a difference in the way that we see the story of the Bible?

This isn't the only "lost book" of the Bible. The Gospel of Peter reportedly was found by a French scientist in 1889, and supposedly Mary Magdalene wrote a gospel, which was discovered in 1896 but not re-published until 1955.

Interestingly enough, the text claims Mary was the head of a new sect, and she was revered over the apostles because she was a woman and represented Sophia, who was basically the female part of Christ within Gnostic theology.

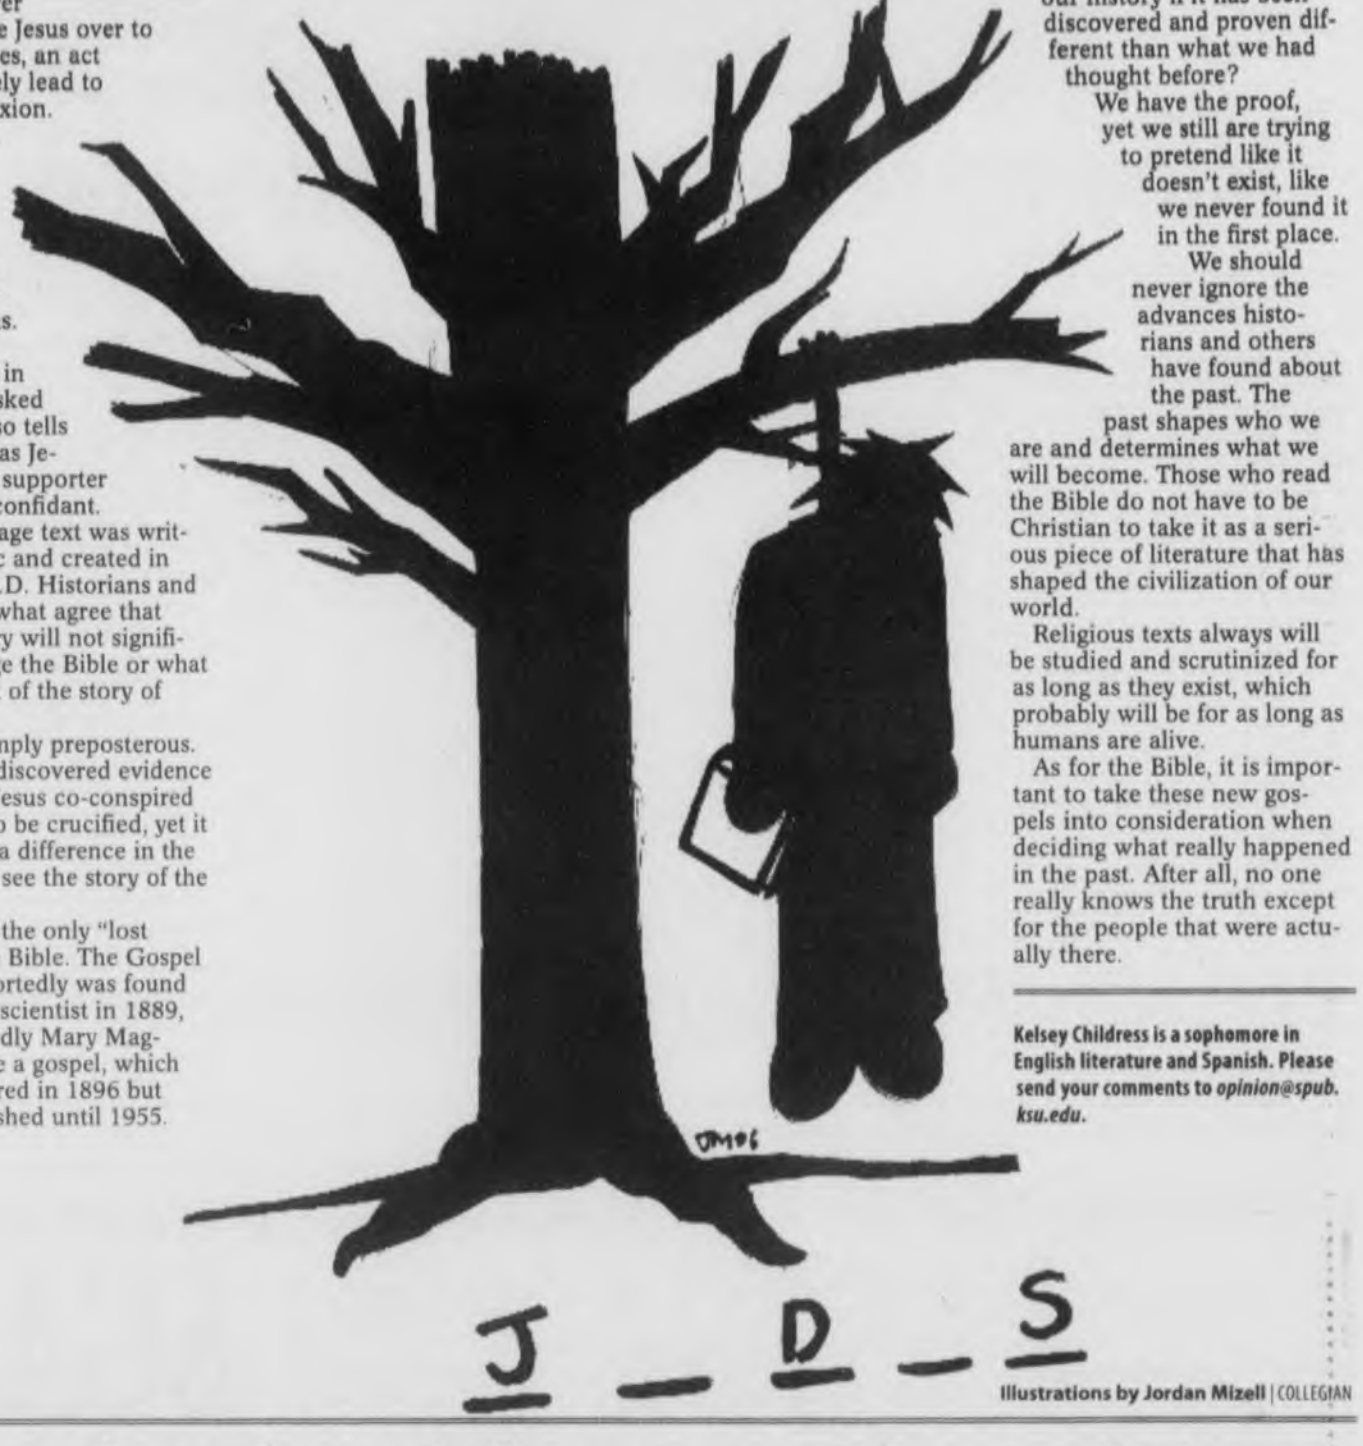
So what is the world supposed to do with these lost gospels, which appear to have been discussed hesitantly only among scholars?

Perhaps the Bible, along with so many other traditions and literature, can never be changed.

Trying to add the lost gospels would be like if we found an alternate ending to Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet" and it stated that Juliet didn't kill herself, but rather went and found another lover. No one would want to permanently change the play, even if Shakespeare himself preferred the second ending.

Even though a play and the religious text of Christianity are vastly different, the same logic applies.

Why is the world so hesitant to change the way we teach our history if it has been discovered and proven different than what we had thought before?



We have the proof, yet we still are trying to pretend like it doesn't exist, like we never found it in the first place.

We should never ignore the advances historians and others have found about the past. The past shapes who we are and determines what we will become. Those who read the Bible do not have to be Christian to take it as a serious piece of literature that has shaped the civilization of our world.

Religious texts always will be studied and scrutinized for as long as they exist, which probably will be for as long as humans are alive.

As for the Bible, it is important to take these new gospels into consideration when deciding what really happened in the past. After all, no one really knows the truth except for the people that were actually there.

Freedom doesn't function without religion

KODY COOPER

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."

Fifty-two of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence were Trinitarian Christians. They knew God as the Source of our inalienable rights.

"We the People of the United States, in Order to ... secure the Blessings of Liberty to ourselves and our Posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Fifty-two of the 55 signers of the Constitution were Orthodox Christians. They knew the blessings of liberty to be God's gifts.

This fact was not lost even on our liberal Supreme Court. The Court declared in School Dist. of Abington Township v. Schempp: "The fact that the Founding Fathers believed devotedly that there was a God and that the inalienable rights of man were rooted in Him is clearly evidenced in their writings, from the Mayflower Compact to the Constitution itself."

Wait a second. Don't the authoritative ACLU lawyers and Ivy League academics teach that the Constitution mandates a separation between church and state?

Admittedly, shortly after ratification of the Constitution, 10 amendments were adopted – the Bill of Rights. These begin with: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or preventing the free exercise thereof."

Did this mean the Framers had just read a Voltaire novel and suddenly become secularistic theophobes bent on eradication of all things religious from the public square? Au contraire.

The evil aimed at was forbiddance of any Church of America.

The First Amendment was never intended to secularize society. This is a lie propagated by reprobate re-definer revisionists.

They seek societal secularization simply because any crusade for redefinition of morality necessarily presupposes rebellion against that Supreme Being who defines morality.

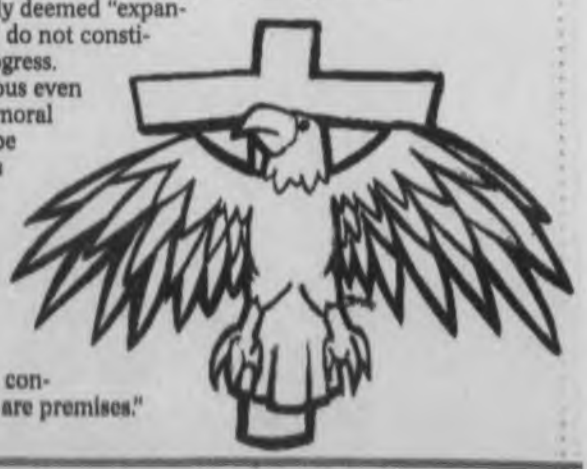
C.S. Lewis called this divine moral directive the Tao. He argued that the Tao consists of a natural moral law universally written on the hearts and minds of humankind.

It is this moral law that whispers admonition of restraint of human passions for the good of the self and others.

The "progressive" revisionists reject the Tao. They argue that we are "progressing" toward a higher moral consciousness. By "progression," they mean state-approved indulgence of pornography, state-approved sexual deviancy and state-funded partial-birth abortions on demand.

The "progressives" thus replace traditional morality with a radical individualism pursuant toward unhinged indulgence in raw, unchecked human desire.

The numbskullery of these nattering nabobs is self-negating. Legalized libertinism and feticide, euphemistically deemed "expansion of rights," do not constitute moral progress.



It is fallacious even to claim new moral directive can be derived. Lewis debunked this myth, arguing fundamental moral truths are bedrock: "You cannot reach them as conclusions: they are premises."

Believe it or not, moral novelties can't be derived by ACLU lawyers, Yale professors or even their former Taliban official students. True morality is anchored in the Tao.

As John Adams wrote, "We have no government armed with power capable of contending with human passions unbridled by morality and religion ... Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people."

If we do not recognize "progression" for the decay that it really is, we will fail to secure God's blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity.

Information, map kiosks would make K-State's campus more accessible to visitors

Editor,

K-State has one of the smallest campuses in the Big 12, yet for new students it can be a frustrating task trying to find certain buildings and classrooms. New students are extremely vulnerable to getting lost on campus during their first year at K-State, due to the fact they are not familiar with our campus layout.

Furthermore, visitors, including potential K-State students, parents and organizations, often times must ask for directions or have a guide direct them around campus. In my opinion, the aids this university has in place to help direct people around campus are mediocre at best.

I feel that K-State should add two to three map/information kiosks on campus, so that students and visitors alike are better aided in finding their way around campus without someone holding their hand.

The maps should be located near heavily traveled areas on campus such as the K-State Student Union, Hale Library, residence halls, etc. They would be similar to maps found in a mall, designating a "you are here" location reference.

The funding for the kiosks and booths would be relatively cheap compared to various other projects being implemented on campus, such as ongoing building renovations and parking garages.

It is up to us as a student body to recognize that there is a problem present and then instigate a change. Not only will you be supporting the improvement of your experience at K-State, but you will also be doing something that contributes to the improvement of our campus for future students.

Ability to declare business track immediately would decrease student-adviser ratio greatly

Editor,

We, along with many of our fellow underclassmen colleagues in the College of Business Administration (CBA), have noticed that it is extremely difficult to schedule advising sessions with our assigned advisers. This is a problem that must be, and can be, fixed by implementing our proposal.

Currently, a student who enters the CBA here at K-State must wait until they obtain between 45 to 60 credit hours to declare what degree track they want to enter in the CBA (accounting, marketing, management, etc.). Until students are allowed to enter their degree track they are assigned to one of five advisers in the CBA.

Now let's do some math real quick here. There are more than 2,500 students in the CBA. Divide this number by five advisers and you have a ratio of students to advisers greater than 500:1.

With our proposal, all students entering the CBA, regardless of how many hours they have, will be allowed to directly enter their degree track. Then, they can be assigned a faculty adviser, thus not having to wait until they are upperclassmen to be able to build a relationship with someone who is actually a professor in classes that they will take. Also, this proposal greatly reduces the student to adviser ratio, putting it around about 22:1.

We ask that everyone please consider this proposal to improve the CBA advising system. If you would like to sign our petition, please e-mail us at abandy@ksu.edu. Thank you for all of your support.

All forms of donations used to support K-State's future

Editor,

There is an old saying that goes something like, "Time is money," and it appears that you have taken it to heart. For that, I applaud you.

It is vital that K-State grads give back their time to the university, and with such a variety of opportunities to do it, it would be a shame if they did not.

That said, in an era where public money for colleges is in a severe decline, it is absolutely crucial for students to understand that much of the resources provided to them are funded by private donations from past K-State grads.

The goal of the Time, Talent and Treasure week every semester is not to get students to donate their signing bonuses to the university.

The goal is to increase awareness of private donations (of not only money, but educational resources as well) and to educate students on how to go about doing it.

Many of the signs posted around campus focus not on monetary donations but on giving in a variety of ways, including internships, guest lecturing and hiring K-State graduates.

I was disheartened and disappointed that the goal of TTT week had been misconstrued as a giant fiscal drive benefiting Student Foundation (incidentally, funds from donations go to the KSU Foundation, the fund-raising arm of the university) rather than the educational and intellectual campaign that it aims to be.

The future of the university depends upon today's students to lead the way in making K-State an even more formidable institution than it already is.

Immigration crisis highlights need for reasonable laws

Editor,

Immigration is more urgent now than it was five or 10 years ago. The Patriot Act and 2002 Homeland Security Act changed the regulatory landscape. Most notably, the Immigration and Naturalization Service was eliminated in March 2003 and reconstituted as three agencies (U.S. Citizen and Immigration Services, Customs and Border Protection and Immigration and Customs Enforcement) within the Department of Homeland Security.

More specifically, immigration is reaching a crisis point because of the lack of legal options for families and workers; I'll list just one narrow example. A very important immigration provision expired and was not renewed after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks. Spouses of U.S. citizens who "entered without inspection" (came in without a visa, essentially) lost a major option called "adjustment of status," which allows them to stay in the United States while awaiting the green card that their U.S. citizen spouse has requested for them.

The consequences are that law-abiding U.S. citizens have spouses who can't become legal unless they want to risk 18 months in their home country waiting for a waiver that may or may not be granted. Rather than risk a significant – and even permanent – breakup of their families, many Americans prefer to get by with a spouse that is here with them, even if he or she can't drive or work.

As K-State international students can attest, U.S. immigration has generally clamped down on everyone in the last five years. It is time to acknowledge the crisis and to create reasonable immigration laws that both immigrants and citizens can understand and follow. Anyone seeking to educate themselves on the laws can visit www.ailf.org.

Time to Stand
Sean Stephenson

Wednesday, April 12 at 8pm
Grand Ballroom, Student Union
Open to ALL Students
Sponsored by SGA and Greek Affairs

Most people live their whole lives on their "BUTS." Our "BUTS" are those excuses that hold us back from doing the things we would like to or know we need to do in life. "I would like to get in shape 'BUT' I don't have the time, energy, patience, etc."

"Time To Stand" is a powerful presentation that outlines where our "BUTS" come from, why they control us, how to get off of them, and lastly how to encourage others to join us in STANDING. Audiences are taken on a journey through human potential, using emotional stories from Sean Stephenson's life. Predicted not to survive at birth because of a rare bone disorder that stunted his growth and caused his bones to be extremely fragile, Sean has triumphed with the power of STANDING.

Goedert
FIRST BASEMAN

By Matthew Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Jared Goedert's two-run home run in the top of the ninth inning gave the K-State baseball team its first victory in three games and its fourth consecutive win over the No. 22 Creighton Blue Jays in Omaha, Neb., on Tuesday.

With the Wildcats (22-8) trailing the Blue Jays (20-9) 4-3 heading into the ninth inning, senior Brandon Farr led off with a single. Goedert, a junior, then took a 1-1 pitch over the center field wall to give K-State the lead heading into the last half of the inning.

"Brandon Farr had a great at-bat to lead off the inning," coach Brad Hill said. "He fouled off two or three pitches and then got a base hit.

"In that situation, we just needed Jared to get a base hit or a double. We were fortunate enough he got it up in the wind, and it carried out of the ballpark."

Senior Bryan Peterson finished off Creighton in the ninth for his fifth save, and freshman reliever Ben Hornbeck (3-0) picked up his third win of the season. The Wildcat bullpen shut out the Blue Jays over the final eight innings after taking over for senior starter Chase Mitchell.

The two teams combined to use 14 pitchers; with Creighton using eight in the loss.

"After we gave up four runs in the first, Chase Mitchell did a great job of coming back in the next couple of innings," Hill said. "The bullpen was there after that, and everyone came in and got three outs and didn't give up a run. They did a great job."

Creighton jumped out to an early 4-0 lead in the bottom of the first with Zach Daeges and Chase Odenreider each blasting two-run home runs off Mitchell.

With the domination of the bullpen, the Wildcats clawed back to within one run, 4-3, in the top of the seventh inning, when senior Joe Roundy hit a homerun (5) to right field with two outs.

Farr finished the day a perfect 4-for-4 on the day and extended his hitting streak to 13 games. Farr's four hits also were a career high.

Hill said the win is big for his team after being swept by Texas this past weekend and before facing Texas Tech this upcoming weekend.

"It makes you feel good and gives you a positive feeling going into Tech," Hill said.

K-State next travels to Lubbock, Texas, on Thursday to take on the Texas Tech Red Raiders in a Big 12 Conference three-game series. Thursday's game starts at 6:30 p.m.

K-State basketball coach Bob Huggins and President Jon Wefald join Huggins' new assistant coaches, Frank Martin and Dalonte Hill, for lunch at the K-State Student Union on Monday afternoon. Martin comes to Manhattan from Cincinnati, and Hill comes from Charlotte, N.C.

New coaches Martin, Hill hit ground running just before college basketball's Signing Day

By Angie Hanson
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State basketball coach Bob Huggins officially announced the hiring of his assistant basketball coaches – Frank Martin and Dalonte Hill – on April 5.

But on Monday – not even a week after arriving at K-State – the duo were settling in, eating lunch in the K-State Student Union and chatting with the media.

Still, there hasn't been much time to get comfortable.

National Signing Day for high school recruits is today, and Martin only arrived on April 6, while Hill arrived April 4. The combination of meeting with recruits, getting to know the K-State players and simply relocating hasn't allowed much time to rest, Martin said.

"We've been really busy," Martin said. "With Signing Day and moving and everything."

Martin and Hill are not complaining, though.

Both coaches were drawn to Manhattan to be part of Huggins' program, in hopes of having a hand in rebuilding a once-storied basketball institution. Their accounts of how Huggins attracted them to Manhattan were distinctly different, though.

Loyalty to Huggins is what drove Martin – who coached for a year under Huggins at Cincinnati – to K-State, he said.

"I believed in him when I was a high school coach, and I believed in him when I decided to accept the offer to coach with him at Cincinnati," Martin said. "I knew this past year he could've gotten a job anywhere, and I want to help him out any way I can."

Hill, who was an assistant coach at Charlotte for Bobby Lutz for the past three years, was contacted by Huggins a couple of weeks ago. He said he knew little about K-State and had no idea where the school was. Once he met with Huggins and visited Manhattan, however, Hill was sold, he said.

"I flew out to take a look because you can make anything look good on the Internet," Hill said. "But I liked what I saw and heard what the plan was and loved the administration."

Now the focus has turned to adjusting K-State's program to Huggins-style basketball, refining the talent already in place and attracting high-profile recruits.

"There's some good players here, and they're learning what I already know about Bob Huggins," Martin said. "We're going to roll up our sleeves and hold people accountable for responsibilities, so we can look back and say we can't say we've never tried."

Martin, and Hill both share Huggins idea of what needs to

Signing Day prospects

JASON BENNETT

Bennett is a 7-foot-2, 240-pound, five-star recruit — according to Rivals.com — from Jacksonville, Fla. The No. 5 center in the country, who played at Jacksonville Arlington Country Day, was at K-State for an official visit April 6-8, and according to Brian Gates of Rivals.com, orally committed to K-State on Monday. It's obvious he wants to play for Huggins, seeing as Bennett committed to Huggins in fall 2004, when Huggins was still at Cincinnati. Bennett also paid a visit to Auburn on March 14.

CLARENCE HOLLOWAY

Holloway is a 7-foot-1, 270-pound Chicago native who is ranked as the No. 11 center in the country for the Class of 2006, according to Rivals.com. He originally signed to Louisville last year, but was declared academically ineligible to play for coach Rick Pitino. He debated heading to the NBA but opted to enroll at IMG Academy in Florida and attend the post-graduate program. He is considering playing college basketball, and coach Bob Huggins visited the center a couple of times before arriving at K-State. Holloway, however, is still considering entering the NBA Draft this year.

BLAKE YOUNG

Young is a 6-foot-2, 180-pound transfer from Daytona Beach (Fla.) Community College and is the No. 8 junior college player in the country, according to Rivals.com. He visited K-State and Huggins on Saturday and Sunday but also has made trips to St. John's and Creighton. The final visit for the top-rated junior college guard will come this weekend when he visits the University of Washington.

This season, Young was named to the Mid-Florida Conference's first team after averaging 23.4 points per game, 4.9 rebounds and 2.1 steals.

- Information gathered from Rivals.com.

Bennett catch is just the beginning for coach Huggins

By the time you read this it might already have happened.

All the talk and the hype has come to a halt, and K-State now has become a national basketball force – one competing for recruits with teams such as Connecticut and Big 12 Conference rivals Oklahoma and Texas.

ANTHONY MENDOZA

National Signing Day is upon us, and the Wildcats will make a big splash.

I mean a really big one, in the form of Jason Bennett, a 7-foot-2 center rated as a five-star recruit by Rivals.com – the highest ranking a player can receive.

It has been speculated Bennett was property of Bob Huggins ever since he was at Cincinnati, but it will be made official today with a simple autograph on a piece of paper.

A guarantee he will play for Huggins for maybe two years on his way to the NBA, if fans are lucky, but he will be a Wildcat, and not a Bearcat.

This is the first chapter in the Huggins era.

A big-time recruit making a trip to middle-America to play collegiate basketball and bypassing Lawrence on the two-hour trip from the airport to Manhattan.

It doesn't stop there.

Another 7-footer might ink his name on a national letter of intent for the Wildcats. Clarence Holloway, an inch shorter than Bennett, but listed at 270 pounds, also might be added to the roster today – a roster that was soft in the middle last season, forcing senior Dramane Diarra to play out of position and fill in as an undersized center, while near 7-footers Tyler Hughes and Serge Afeli sat the bench as ineffective options.

Either recruit would be an upgrade, but landing both would give the Wildcats a depth in the middle that not any other team, possibly in the nation, can compete with.

However, this year's class is going to be just a preview of bigger things to come. Call it the calm before the storm of top-rated players invading Manhattan.

Next year at this time, the K-State program could land the top-three recruits in the nation to add to what is probably the best recruiting class the Wildcats have had in many years.

The 2007 class of O.J. Mayo, Bill Walker and Michael Beasley, all rumored to be coming to K-State, would be the best class ever. Not at K-State, but in the history of collegiate basketball.

Sure, Huggins has had past issues with his players' low – or non-existent – graduation rates for a few years. But I'm sure there are a lot of students graduating from K-State in about a month that are now looking into graduate school.

Why would you want to miss the next few years of the basketball season?

I'm sure the thought has rattled around in the mind of a few, if not all those holding an option for season tickets this coming year and the years to come.

GLF| Kern earns Player of the Week honors

Kern

Following a school- and tournament-record 14-under par 199 this weekend in a victory at the ASU Thunderbird Invitational, K-State senior Ben Kern earned Men's Collegiate Player of the Week honors by both Golfweek and Golfworld, the publications have announced.

Kern's performance guided K-State to a third-place finish at 17-under par 835, the second best 54-hole mark in school history.

With his three-round total of 199, Kern set an ASU Thunderbird Invitational record, becoming the first player in the tournament's 34-year history to finish below 200, something both Phil Mickelson and Tiger Woods couldn't accomplish during their times at Arizona State and Stanford.

CFB| K-State looking for best tailgating stories

The K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is launching a search for the best football tailgating experiences by its fans and will publish a select number of these stories in its football gameday programs this fall.

Fans should submit their favorite stories via e-mail to ksuathletics@yahoo.com. These accounts should consist of at least 100 words (but no more than 300 words) describing their best tailgating experiences while cheering on the Wildcats.

The entries also should include two or three high-resolution photos (300 dpi JPEG or TIFF), as well as a favorite tailgating recipe (with complete details). Fans should include a proper e-mail address and phone number with their entry.

The department will receive entries until June 1.

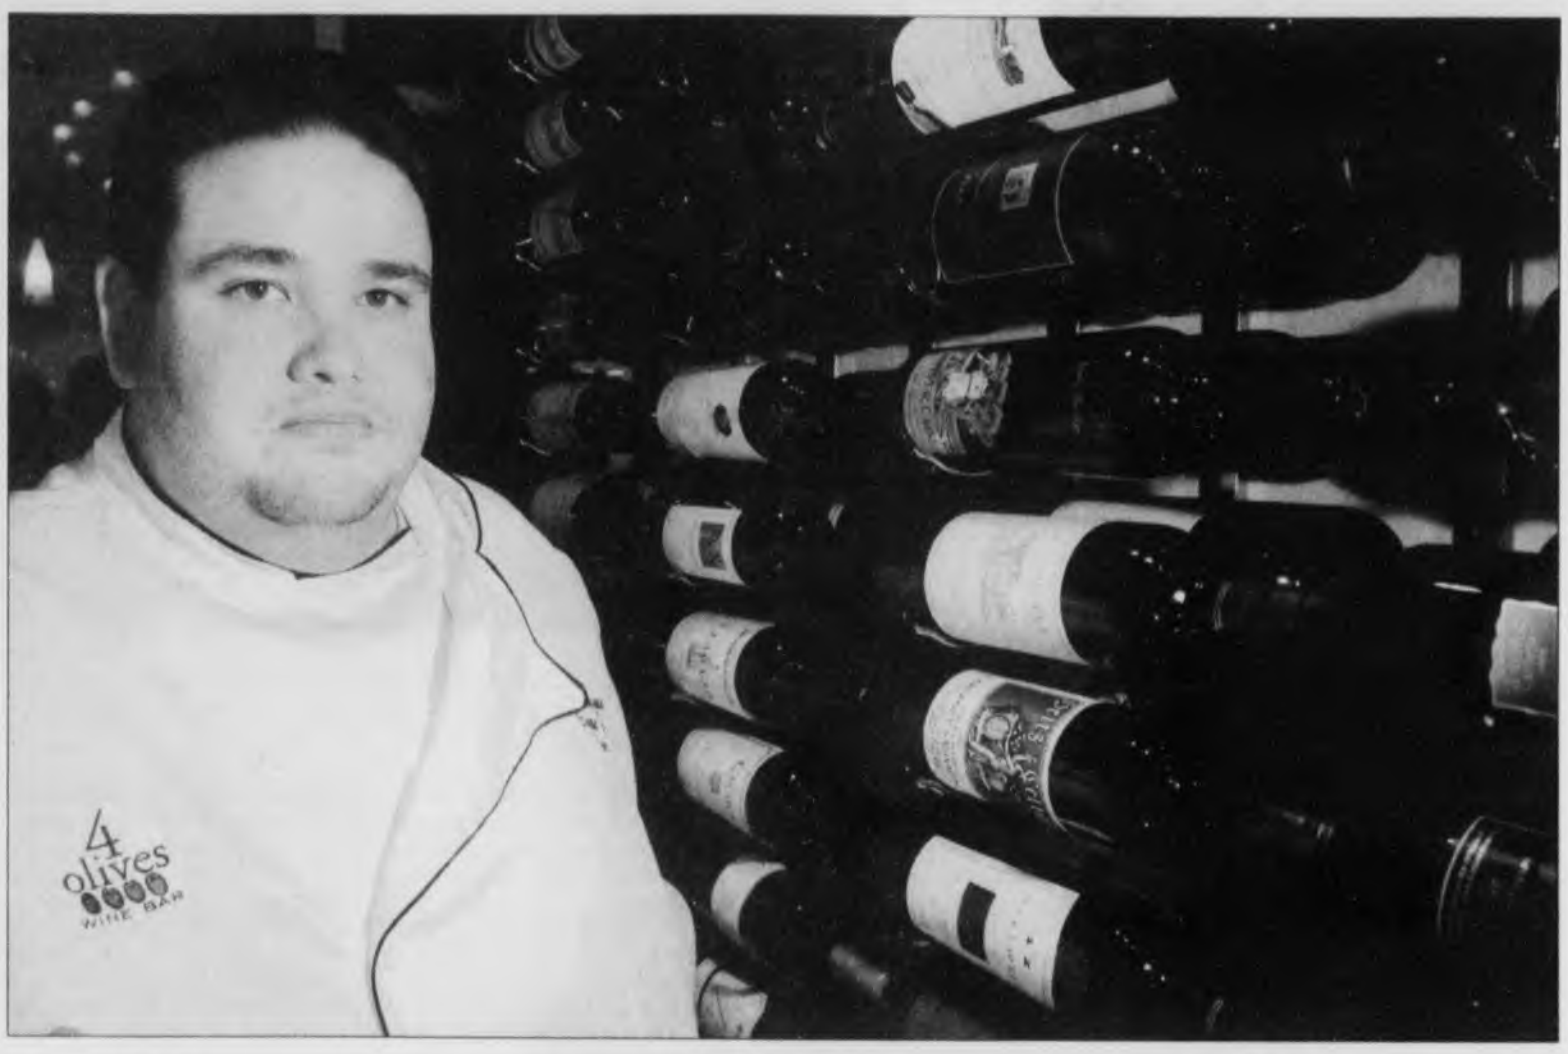
NORMAN, Okla. — Jeff Capel was hired as Oklahoma's basketball coach Tuesday, to replace Kelvin Sampson and take over a program under NCAA investigation.

Capel resigned from Virginia Commonwealth, and VCU confirmed Capel's move in a statement from president Eugene Trani and athletic director Richard Sander. The Sooners scheduled an afternoon news conference on campus to introduce Capel.

Capel, a former Duke player, was 79-41 in four seasons as coach at VCU. He signed a two-year contract extension last month that ran through 2012.

NFL | Bowling Hall of Fame pins Bettis



Bettis

ST. LOUIS — Just a little more than two months after announcing his retirement from football, Pittsburgh Steelers running back Jerome Bettis already is headed for the Hall of Fame — the Bowling Hall of Fame.

The International Bowling Museum & Hall of Fame sits near Busch Stadium in St. Louis. For the first time, the hall is honoring celebrity bowlers. Bettis, 34, will be the first inductee into the Celebrities Bowling Hall of Fame, the organization announced Tuesday.

Bettis has bowled since growing up in Detroit and, according to the Bowling Hall of Fame, maintains an average of more than 200. He has rolled a perfect 300 game.

Bettis is scheduled to be enshrined June 28 during the Bowling Proprietor's Association of America's International Bowl Expo in Las Vegas.

4 Olives owner experiments with specials, wines, seafoods

By Katie Joyce
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Hanging on the grass green walls of 4 Olives Wine Bar is the 2005 Wine Spectator Award, given for excellence of the wine list, menu, service style, wine storage and food and wine pairings.

"Picking your favorite wine is like picking your favorite kid," said Chef Scott Benjamin, owner of 4 Olives, 3033 Anderson Ave., a restaurant with more than 500 selections on the wine list.

In the center of the main dining room is a temperature- and moisture-controlled glass-walled room that holds the restaurant's wine.

The collection includes eight wines from this year's Wine Spectator Best Wines list, several older vintages and more than 50 wines from the famous Bordeaux wine-producing region of France.

Benjamin previously worked as a wine representative, and he admitted his experience was a key part in building the current wine collection. He said since he knows winemakers and vendors, it has been easier to obtain wines he wants.

John Kongsgaard, owner of a vineyard in Napa Valley, Calif., was going to stop shipping his wines to Kansas until Benjamin said he convinced him to continue.

"I'm trying to elevate what's possible in Kansas," Benjamin said.

He said the casual atmosphere helps draw a customer base that is constantly changing. 4 Olives plays music that is reminiscent of Frank Sinatra and Nat King Cole, but is performed by modern artists like Michael Bublé.

Benjamin said some people come in three times a week, and a few customers make the trip from Texas to drink his wines. Customers ranging from college students on a budget to locals looking for a fine-dining experience can be found at 4 Olives each day.

Cassie Freyermuth, junior in music appreciation, said she enjoyed dining at the restaurant.

"When I ate there, the meal was fabulous, and even though it was a little expensive, it was great for a special occasion," she said.

Benjamin said the extensive wine collection is not the only reason to visit the restaurant. The menu, which he said he developed by piecing together ideas from eight to 10 years of dining and working in other restaurants, has dishes made from the finest and freshest ingredients.

"All the best winemakers believe the best wines are made by the grapes, and I believe the same thing about food," Benjamin said.

Benjamin said he often notices customers who try to guess what gives their meal such an interesting and complex flavor. He said he creates American cuisine updated by integrating the styles of Mediterranean, French, Moroccan and Italian cooking.

Every Friday and Saturday night, 4 Olives features a seafood dish, and Benjamin said he has never repeated a special. He said a few of the weekly specials have ended up on the menu because they were so popular.

"I always try to bring in the best possible seafood," said Benjamin, who has been known to have seafood shipped overnight from New Zealand and Hawaii so he can offer the best products.

The restaurant sells more seafood meals than anything else on the menu, and Benjamin said he is glad to see people try his exotic dishes.

"It's an old idea that Kansans only eat steak and potatoes," he said.

Some seafood items offered are baked lobster ravioli, mango-peppercorn glazed salmon and grilled ahi tuna.

Other items include rabbit moutarde, goat cheese and olive bruschetta, penne with seared zucchini and tomatoes, and 10 different cheeses served as appetizers. Benjamin's wife, Rachel, teaches analytical chemistry at K-State, cares for their three children during the day and makes all of the fresh breads and desserts each morning.

Lauren Davis, front-of-house manager and senior in modern languages, said 4 Olives is special.

"4 Olives is very unique, especially in a town like Manhattan," she said.

Davis said the restaurant stands apart from others.

"We're very excited about great wines, great service, great food, and we try to combine these to make a great dining experience," she said.

In the next two years, Benjamin said he hopes to relocate to a larger building where he would have a bigger kitchen and could increase his seating capacity from 75 to 100 seats.

He also has thoughts of opening a second or even third restaurant in the future.

"I just really love food and really love wine," he said.

Benjamin said he wants other people to share his passion.

"I get more pleasure out of making a meal for someone else," he said.

Benjamin said he hopes his restaurant can "create experiences, not just a meal."

Proper tipping rewards service, ensures attention

Contrary to popular belief, giving or receiving a tip is a privilege – not a right. There is no right and wrong when leaving a tip, and there are no set rules to the art of tipping. However, there are important guidelines and suggestions to consider when leaving a gratuity for anyone in the service industry.

MARK SIBILLA

RESTAURANTS

The most common place for tipping is at a restaurant. According to the Web site www.tipping.org, the most controversial section on its site concerns gratuity for restaurant wait staff, because many wait staff and customers forget that a tip is a gratuity, not a must.

This does not give permission to be stingy when tipping, because in many places, wait staff do not receive minimum wage and must work for tips, which they often must share with other servers, cooks, etc. However, don't feel guilty withholding a tip when the service is poor.

A good rule-of-thumb is to leave a 10 to 15 percent tip at almost all restaurants. At a four-star restaurant or for excellent service, 20 percent is appropriate.

Gratuity might be added automatically to large parties at restaurants (which generally are six or more people), but if not, 20 percent is generally a good idea.

At a buffet-style restaurant, one can tip less, usually 5-10 percent, but it is appropriate to leave a little more, especially if the server is attentive and does more than just bring fresh plates and napkins.

DELIVERIES

When getting food delivered, it is usually a good idea to tip the driver, but like all tipping, it is best to use common sense when doing so.

You should tip $1-2 minimum with any food delivery service. If the distance for the delivery is longer than a couple of miles or if the weather is lousy, add another dollar or two to the tip.

Tips of $5 or more definitely are warranted when tipping drivers responsible for large deliveries.

Delivery drivers are a completely different breed of service worker, and they will remember if you do not tip (especially on large or difficult orders), so it is always a good idea to throw a couple of bucks their direction. I have seen the ramifications of when customers do not tip delivery drivers, and they are not pretty.

BARS

According to the book "Etiquette for Outlaws" by Rob Cohen and David Wollock, money is the language of love. A tip of 50 cents to $1 per drink is proper. At a more expensive bar, leave larger tips.

To befriend a server or bartender early, it helps if the first tip is larger. Decide on how much you plan to tip for each drink, and when you get your first drink, it is always nice to tip an extra 50 cents to $1. This will ensure that you are noticed, and it will increase the chances of receiving better service as the night wears on. However, if you tip big, don't act like you own the bar - no one likes a jerk.

Finally, if you are at a party with an open bar, tip. Don't get cheap simply because the drinks are on the house; the hosts will appreciate it greatly.

HAIR SALON/ BARBERSHOP

It's courteous, and a great gesture, to tip your barber or beautician. At a barbershop, a minimum of $1 is suggested. Tipping is a good way to build report with your barber, so next time you won't get your head shaved "accidently" during your next haircut.

At the beauty salon, if you have one person working on your hair, tip 15 percent of the bill. If your time was split among two or more stylists, give 10 percent to each. It also is good etiquette to give $1-2 to manicurists and the people who wash your hair.

ON VACATION

Often packaged vacations will include tips in the price of the trip, but for those who create their own vacations, that luxury is not available.

Usually tipping at hotels is regulated to more upscale buildings, but it never hurts to leave the cleaning crew a couple of dollars for their work.

At higher-priced hotels, tipping is encouraged. Waiters who bring food to the room should receive 15 percent of the food bill.

Chambermaids should be given a minimum of $5 for every night of your stay. For bringing luggage to your room, give the bellhop about $10; if the bellhop simply opens and shows the room, a smaller tip is appropriate. Consider higher tips for longer hotel stays.

When tipping, use these guidelines in addition to good old common sense in order to receive the best service wherever you are.

DAILY HOROSCOPES

Aries
(March 21 - April 19)
Excellent time to do some personal re-engineering. I mean, face it — your mother simply wasn't much of an engineer.

Taurus
(April 20 - May 20)
Unknown to you, people think you are a wimp — just because of your weak handshake. You need to get one of those hand exercisers and use it constantly for a few months. Then crush their little hands into pulp!

Gemini
(May 21 - June 20)
In one of those amusing mix-ups that happen so frequently in modern life, a friend of yours will have mistaken your reference to "her suit" and thought you said "hirsute." Still, this might prove a little awkward.

Cancer
(June 21 - July 22)
Today you will discover a way to have your cake and eat it, too! Unfortunately, everyone else will think that's really disgusting.

Leo
(July 23 - Aug. 22)
Today old Beatles songs will be playing everywhere you go. Eventually this will make you twist and shout until you work it all out.

Virgo
(Aug. 23 - Sept. 22)
You will spend a lot of time contemplating four-dimensional space. Unfortunately, you'll keep getting distracted by things popping into nonexistence around you.

Libra
(Sept. 23 - Oct. 22)
Excellent day to sneak.

Scorpio
(Oct. 23 - Nov. 21)
Later this week you'll feel much like Scarlet O'Hara did, when she said, "I'll never be hungry again!"

Sagittarius
(Nov. 22 - Dec. 21)
People around you are starting to look a bit complacent. Good day to adopt a haunted expression and carry a large ball of aluminum foil.

Capricorn
(Dec. 22 - Jan. 20)
Focus on financial issues today. It's OK to keep putting your money in your mattress, but you might want to switch to paper money. (It's less jingly.)

Aquarius
(Jan. 21 - Feb. 18)
Today you will discover a troupe of gypsies hiding in your bathroom. They will leave when you ask them to, but you should expect a fair amount of grumbling.

Pisces
(Feb. 19 - March 20)
Excellent day to blow soap bubbles in unusual places. See if you can get them to drift by people who are thinking too hard.

Dance ensembles perform pieces in regional contest

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Less than one week after performing in SpringDance 2006, members of KSU Dance Ensemble are performing again.

Two dance ensembles will participate in the regional American College Dance Festival today through Saturday in Wichita.

Julie Pentz, associate professor of speech communication, theater and dance, choreographed the jazz piece "Mirrored Reflection," which was rehearsed one, last time Tuesday night before the festival.

"When you're in a performance situation, sometimes things happen, and this ensemble has really stepped up and got the job done," Pentz said. "It doesn't matter the outcome."

The piece will be performed by Callie Peterson, senior in dance; Erin Kolarik, junior in mass communications; Julie Powell, sophomore in business administration pre-professional; and Sarah Kellner, junior in pre-nursing.

Pentz said about 20 colleges and universities will appear at the festival, which takes place at a different school each year.

The festival is more of a dance showcase than a competition, Pentz said. Each dance will be critiqued by three adjudicators from professional dance companies and instructors from other universities. The critique process is anonymous to keep it fair, she said.

The adjudicators will select the best pieces they want to see for a gala performance, and some of those pieces might be chosen for the national festival at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., Pentz said.

Dancers will be able to attend dance classes by different choreographers and instructors at the festival, Pentz said.

The ensemble also performed "Mirrored Reflection" at SpringDance last week.

"It has worked to (the dancers') advantage and helped them to get ready," she said. "There is nothing wrong showing a good work twice."

Pentz said she was trying a new idea by incorporating frames in "Mirrored Reflection."

"It's using your own experiences and making something new from it," she said.

The dancers have two different personalities when using the frames in the dance, and the combination of the two holds the piece together, Pentz said.

"When they're behind the frame, the movement is very slow and articulate," she said. "When they come through the frame, the quality and movement becomes wicked fast."

Since its premiere in SpringDance 2005, "Mirrored Reflection" has seen three cast changes.

Peterson, who has been dancing since age 3, said it was challenging to find herself in the piece.

"Julie gave us the choreography and said, 'Here – do whatever you want with it,'" Peterson said. "It's all about working together with teammates."

Kolarik, who has been dancing since age 6, said dancing is her passion.

"I can't give it up, even though I don't have the time to devote to a major or minor in dance," she said.

The most challenging and rewarding aspect of "Mirrored Reflection" was its flexibility, Kolarik said.

"It's not all doing the same thing at the same time," she said. "It's one dance, but we each have our own part in it."

Powell, who has been dancing since age 3, said acting is the most challenging and rewarding aspect of the piece.

"It's in your mind, and you have to try to convey it to the audience," Powell said.

Kellner has been dancing since age 5, and she said she took a year off from dance when she came to college.

Her first performance at K-State was in WinterDance 2005.

Kellner said she watched the performance of a former "Mirrored Reflection" cast member to learn the dance.

She said the festival is her last chance to take classes from other choreographers and perform, since she will attend nursing school in the fall.

"It's not a competition, but we've set the standards," Kellner said. "There's a chance for nationals, so we're excited for that chance to move on."

K-State also will take a student-choreographed piece to the festival. Renae Johnston, junior in theater, choreographed the modern piece "Random Irritations," which was performed at WinterDance 2005 and at SpringDance last week.

The piece will be performed by Sarah Dean, senior in sociology; Gabby Hunter, senior in theater; and Jessica Villa, freshman in theater.

Johnston said the piece has undergone several cast changes since its premiere.

"It has changed a lot, and I took it a lot more seriously once it was accepted to take to festival.

"It was rewarding to see it on stage at McCain, and I'm the only student who gets (to take a choreographed piece) from K-State."

Volunteers help new students adjust through Wildcat Warm-up

By Scott Girard
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Adjusting to college life can be hard for many incoming K-State students. Twenty students have volunteered part of their summers to help ease the transition.

Wildcat Warm-up, an extended student orientation, takes place June 9-11. Its goal is to introduce incoming freshmen to the K-State experience. The program hires 20 students to serve as counselors each year to work with new students.

The counselors devote two weeks of their summer to train and participate in the program. The counselors, who train from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, learn a variety of information and techniques to help the incoming students with questions or issues about the university.

Emily Lehning, program organizer and assistant dean of New Student Services, said counselors learn several different aspects of the program, including where to be and at what time, how to interact with the students and how to handle an emergency. Counselors are given CPR and other health-related training.

"Our goal is to build team spirit, but I also hope the counselors can refine the leadership skills they have already brought to the program and university," Lehning said.

Many students previously involved in the program return to become counselors.

Ana Miller, freshman in pre-professional business administration, said she participated in Wildcat Warm-up the summer before her first semester at K-State, and one year later she is a counselor.

"The experience I had was very important in helping me get acquainted with K-State," Miller said. "It was a good way to meet people, especially since I was out-of-state."

She said the program goes through a variety of exercises to acquaint students with K-State.

"You go through simulations of different events like AfterDark; you learn all the fight songs, tour the campus, meet the cheerleaders and a whole bunch of interesting activities," Miller said.

Miller, who is involved in a variety of organizations on campus, said she hopes to gain as much of an experience as a counselor as she did when she was a participant.

"My goal is to be available to them whenever they need help," Miller said. "I also hope to grow in my leadership abilities."

Students range not only in age, from freshmen to seniors, but also in levels of involvement. Some students, like Miller, are involved in programs throughout campus, while others, like Katie Stegman, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education, volunteered for the program because of prior experience.

Stegman said she has not been involved in too many groups around campus but said she enjoyed Wildcat Warm-up so much as an incoming freshman that she came back.

"I expect to gain a new experience from being a counselor," Stegman said. "I got involved so incoming students can be as excited about K-State as I became over the last few years."

Lehning said she hopes 225-250 incoming freshman will be involved in the program this year.

"The program is supposed to give a snapshot of college life and serve as a springboard for future success," Lehning said. "We hope this program will give them the knowledge and skills that will help them at K-State and beyond."

Search engine donates cents to charities

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Searching the Internet now can add pennies to the pockets of non-profit organizations.

Goodsearch.com, launched in November 2005, is a search engine that donates part of its revenue to charitable organizations across the country.

The money given to the charities comes from advertising, and each time a search is conducted, about one cent goes to a charity of choice, said Ken Ramberg, co-founder of GoodSearch.

About half of the revenue from GoodSearch goes to charitable organizations.

"You're searching the Internet anyway," Ramberg said. "You might as well support your favorite cause."

If the preferred organization does not exist as an option on the search engine, Ramberg said it can be added easily.

When searching, users also can track the amount of money their charities have received.

For a non-profit group with about 1,000 supporters, about $7,300 could be raised in a year if each supporter used the search engine twice a day.

GoodSearch is powered by Yahoo!, a reliable name users know, Ramberg said.

"We have a partnership with Yahoo!, so you get the same high-quality results you would normally get," he said.

While serving on the boards of several non-profit organizations over the years, Ramberg said he has seen the need for charitable organizations to find new ways to make money.

"I see how hard it is for them to continuously raise money each year," Ramberg said.

Although some might not be able to give their own resources to various charitable organizations, Ramberg said GoodSearch is an easy way to give back.

"People have given a lot of money to charities, earmarked to disasters," he said. "This is a way for them to support charities without reaching into their own pockets."

Ramberg said GoodSearch provides a different niche to other means of charitable giving, but the group still generates awareness of the service to the public and non-profit organizations.

"The support we're getting from everybody is overwhelming," Ramberg said. "It's a win-win for everybody."

Kate Elliott is the grant coordinator for the Elephant Sanctuary in Hohenwald, Tenn., a natural-habitat refuge for sick or needy elephants.

Elliott heard about GoodSearch earlier this year and said she thought the Elephant Sanctuary should be involved.

After the Elephant Sanctuary was placed on GoodSearch, Elliott said members of the Elephant Sanctuary started using the search engine constantly.

"It's the simplicity that makes it successful," Elliott said. "People want to do more than write a check. This is simple. You don't have to purchase anything."

Using GoodSearch is a way for people to give in a clear channel, Elliott said, as well as provide a significant amount of money for charitable organizations.

"It's another simple way of making a difference," she said. "It's the importance of a penny."

Jason Lantz, director of operations for the American Red Cross of the Flint Hills, said he had not heard about GoodSearch.

After talking with other Red Cross officials, Lantz said he could not endorse the search engine currently, but it is something he thought could be a possibility for the future.

"At this time, we're going to research it," he said. "It looks like it has promise, but we want to make sure before endorsing it."

Paintball team takes 2nd at nationals

By Austin Meek
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The swish of a basketball net, the crunch of a bone-jarring tackle, the crack of a ball and bat – these sounds conjure up images of sports glory. Here's another one for the list: the splat of a paintball.

The K-State paintball team took its place among the best in the nation by finishing second at the College Paintball National Championships April 8-9 in Dallas.

Kurt Haberstroh, sophomore in pre-professional business administration and president of the K-State paintball club, said the team's run to the championship game surprised everyone.

"We really didn't know what to expect," Haberstroh said. "It kind of caught us by surprise. We just kept playing with heart, and finished second in the nation."

K-State qualified for nationals by winning a tournament in Manhattan in October. K-State did not compete in another tournament prior to last weekend, however.

Darran McEuen, senior in electrical engineering, said the Wildcats didn't know how they would stack up against the competition at nationals.

"We knew we were good; we just didn't know how good," McEuen said. "We hadn't played any of the teams from the Great Lakes or the East Coast or any of the California teams."

The K-State paintballers went into the tournament seeded fifth out of 23 teams. They compiled a 6-2 record in the preliminary round, which earned the team a place in the semifinals. The preliminary field included schools from across the nation, including Texas A&M, West Virginia, Southern Illinois and Arkansas.

Eric Morrissey, senior in social science, said the game against Southern Illinois was especially memorable.

"They (Southern Illinois) were looking forward to playing us very much," Morrissey said. "They thought they were going to beat us. We beat them with four people alive. There are only five people on a team, so when you win with four alive, you win pretty convincingly."

K-State advanced to face a squad from the University of California-Irvine in the semifinals. After dropping the first match of a best-of-three series, K-State rallied to win the next two.

"Losing the first game in semifinals really pushed us harder to win the next two," Morrissey said. "We knew if we won the next two, we'd be able to go to the finals."

Morrissey said many of the other teams were rooting for K-State to knock off the Anteaters and advance to the finals.

"A lot of the other teams didn't care for UC-Irvine. They really wanted someone to stick it to them," Morrissey said. "That happened to be us."

In the championship game, K-State faced another UC-Irvine squad. This time, the results were not as favorable for the Wildcats, as they were swept in two games by the Anteaters.

McEuen said the aggressive strategy employed by K-State throughout the tournament didn't work in the championship game.

"(UC-Irvine) sat back and tried to shoot us out," McEuen said. "We kept trying to push. We just tried to push too hard."

Despite the disappointment of losing the championship game, McEuen said he is proud of the team's run.

"When you lose a championship game, you're always disappointed because of how close you came," McEuen said. "But for how well we played, we were really happy."

Morrissey said the team's performance could serve as a springboard for the K-State paintball club.

"By us doing well, that will give us something to come back to the university and say, 'We're not basketball or softball or baseball, but paintball is something huge and it's going to continue to grow,'" Morrissey said.

Job offers include more than salary

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Graduates should consider their worth and other aspects when searching for a job.

The Career and Employment Services Web site, www.ksu.edu/ces, provides tips for negotiating salaries. It suggests that graduates research the job market they are entering and determine their market value.

The site also said students should not negotiate salary until a job has been offered.

Kerri Keller, director of CES, said there is not typically a lot of salary negotiation when coming straight out of college.

"There's some negotiating around start dates or some of the other benefit kinds of things – potential salary increases in the future based on performance or something like that," Keller said. "There's not a lot of salary negotiating on the entry-level stage."

Keller said the National Association of Colleges and Employers puts out a survey with information on the average salary by major or job function, and there is a copy in the CES office.

"That provides really good information," Keller said. "We also have information on our post-graduate survey. You can see what the average salaries are for a K-State major."

Keller said a way people can raise a salary offer is if they have multiple job offers.

"It's true that if you don't ask, you won't necessarily get anything different," Keller said. "On the other hand, you have to be careful and prepared to ask. If you're going to go in and try to negotiate your salary, you need to have done your research. You need to know why you think it's warranted."

Applicants need to look at the total benefit package, not just the salary, Keller said.

"Even if something has a higher salary, that may be equal to another offer that has a less salary but better benefits," she said.

Lainee Waye, senior in elementary education, said she just accepted a job at Riverview Elementary School in the DeSota district of Kansas City, Mo.

She said each district has its own salary schedule. She found her qualifications on it, and that is how she knew what she would make. The schedule takes into consideration factors like education and background.

Other offers from this school, like location and benefit packages, were some of her deciding factors.

"The resources that each school had were very important to me," Waye said.

"For example, they (Riverview) have a really good mentoring program. The faculty is also a big deciding factor. At this school, there's a good balance between new and experienced teachers."

Waye said her advice to students looking for a job is to utilize the eFolio, the online credential file from CES, because it saves money.

"(The) eFolio was a really smart thing for CES to request for us," Waye said. "It saves us a lot of hassle. Make sure you get out early and get your application out there. Make sure you research in depth the place you are applying so you can tell them why you want to be there."

Boone Burnside, senior in construction science, said he was hired at Picerne doing renovation and new construction in Fort Riley, Kan.

Burnside said he also had items other than salary driving his decision to choose this job over other offers.

"To work locally was my goal as long as it was competitive with my other offers," Burnside said. "My biggest thing was location for this first job."

Burnside said K-State's Department of Construction Science is good about bringing employers to campus.

"You never know where your leads are going to come from," Burnside said.

He said he was unsure if college graduates can negotiate a salary successfully.

"As an incoming person, you need to look for what you think you're worth, but I don't know how much negotiating power you have," Burnside said. "There's more than salary involved. You look at benefits and other things. They're kind of taking a gamble with us. As you gain experience, then you can start to bargain."

LIBRARY | Bond fee surplus funds to pay for search appliance

6,000 of which are available in the library catalog.

About 140 non-K-State databases, most of which are paid for, also are accessible.

This can make information difficult to find, but the Google search appliance will simplify the search process, Askey said.

The server can index up to 500,000 documents, and while large corporations commonly use it, Hale is probably the first library to have this appliance, he said.

In addition to making all of this information available in just a few clicks, it is hoped that the new appliance will access the library catalog, which consists of millions of records, Askey said.

It also is hoped that the new search appliance will be fully installed by the end of the semester, Askey said.

The student fee bond surplus money also will fund the implementation of an SFX link resolving software system.

Many of the 140 outside databases that K-State students access through the library typically offer indexing for periodical literature. However, obtaining the full text of articles can be difficult sometimes, Askey said.

"For those 140 data bases, we spend a pile of cash, probably well over seven digits," Askey said. "If you don't have a good ability to link them to each other for finding full text, you're not leveraging money as well as you could."

This software will allow students to search any database they need. By clicking on the link to this software, the server will search all the other databases for a full-text version of the desired article, Askey said.

Links to the full-text article will pop up, and if none are available, the device will automatically search the library catalog for the information in print. If all else fails, it will send the citation data to the interlibrary loan system.

This system is a national library network that has been available for years and went online about one year ago, Askey said.

If K-State doesn't have what a student is looking for, the article or book can be obtained elsewhere, he said.

"Having a server that correlates everything for you and can find it for you in about four seconds, that's a huge timesaver," Askey said. "You can ideally find 10 articles for your topic in a half-hour versus half a day doing it the traditional way."

Hale requested fee bond surplus funding for four different projects but was only funded for these two. The two proposals rejected were the conversion of a meeting room in the library to a technology classroom and additional public seating.

Larry Fadler, member of the student fee bond surplus committee, said the committee funded the library search appliances because every student will benefit from them.

"It's going to make it that much easier to get research faster," Fadler, sophomore in pre-professional business administration, said. "It narrows down the results to something you can actually use, and it narrows it down really quickly."

during that time, and he had an impact on that."

Charles Reagan, associate to the president and Landon Lecture committee chair, said Walesa was one of the key figures in the fall of the Soviet Union.

"He's an important historical figure, much like (Mikhail) Gorbachev," Reagan said.

Reagan said every one of the Landon lecturers are key figures in the political world, and it just worked out that this year has featured two of the most integral people involved in the fall of the Berlin Wall.

Reagan said Walesa's speech will be given in Polish, and instead of a simultaneous interpreter – as was used for Gorbachev's speech – there will be a sequential interpreter.

"Basically (Walesa) will speak for about a paragraph, and then he will pause and the interpreter will say it in English," he said.

For his work in Poland, Walesa is listed as one of Time magazine's 100 most important people of the century, according to www.time.com.

Reagan said he encourages students to take advantage of an opportunity to hear such an important world leader.

"I wouldn't have brought someone out here if I didn't think the students should see them," he said.

ASSISTANTS | Two coaches bring new recruiting ties for Wildcats

be accomplished here to achieve success, but it was different paths that led the two coaches to Manhattan.

Martin, who has 21 years coaching experience on his résumé and is known for his recruiting abilities, comes to K-State after assisting at Cincinnati for two years – first under Huggins and then for coach Andy Kennedy during the 2005-06 season.

During his two-year tenure at Cincinnati, the Bearcats notched a 41-26 record and advanced to the post season both years, one of which was the NCAA Tournament.

Before signing on at Cincinnati, Martin spent four years (2000-04) as an assistant coach at Northeastern, where he honed his recruiting skills after logging two years as the recruiting coordinator.

The majority of Martin's coaching experience, however, comes from the 15 years spent coaching in Miami's high school circuit, where, as an assistant coach at Miami Senior High School from 1985-93, he helped the school tally five state championships.

When he was head coach at Miami Senior High from 1995-98, he led his program to three-consecutive state championships and developed teams that were ranked in the top five in the country – according to USA Today – all three years.

"I have known Frank for a long time," Huggins said in a release. "He is terrific. He has great contacts, does a great job recruiting, and he is great on the floor. He is also great with the players. He has got the total package."

At age 27, Dalonte Hill brings youth to K-State's coaching staff.

Hill hails from Charlotte, N.C., where he played for the 49ers in 1997-2000. After graduating, he became an assistant coach at Charlotte for Lutz in 2003. In his three years at Charlotte, the 49ers posted a 61-30 record, including three-straight post-season appearances.

"Dalonte is a great guy who has great contacts," Huggins said in a release.

"He is a guy that has always wanted to work with me, and I thought this was a great fit for him. He is a young guy that will also do an outstanding job coaching on the floor. He is connected to the AAU programs in the East and South, and he will do a great job recruiting for us."

Top recruit signs to K-State; family plans to follow

On March 4, Jason Bennett, splits defenders during the Class 2A FHSAA boys' basketball finals at the Lakeland Center in Lakeland, Fla., Bennett signed a National Letter of Intent to play at K-State for coach Bob Huggins on Wednesday.

Basketball coach Bob Huggins is one-for-one in recruiting so far.

Jason Bennett, a 7-foot-3, 260-pound center from Jacksonville, Fla., signed with K-State at a press conference at 12:30 p.m. Wednesday at his high school, making him Huggins' first top signee.

"I think it's a decision that Jason's totally happy with, and I think coach Huggins is the top coach in the country, and he'll take him where he wants to be," said Rex Morgan, Bennett's high school coach at Arlington Country Day.

Bennett, a five-star recruit and No. 5 center in the nation, according to Rivals.com, visited K-State April 6-8. On Monday, Rivals.com reported Bennett verbally committed to be a Wildcat.

On Wednesday, however, it was in ink.

"Jason is going to be the centerpiece of what we build in the future here at Kansas State," Huggins said in a press release. "I fully expect Jason to come in and contribute immediately to this program. He is going to get nothing but bigger, stronger and better as we move closer to the fall."

Although Bennett hasn't even been a Wildcat for 24 hours, he already is making history as the tallest player ever at K-State. More importantly, Bennett uses his height to his advantage, Huggins said.

"He is an outstanding shot blocker. He has a great presence around the goal, and that will enable us to do more offensively," Huggins said.

Junior guard Akeem Wright said signing a player of Bennett's height and ability will benefit the Cats next season and – in addition to fellow recruit Kenny Williams – fill the missing void at the post position.

"It gives us a big man very skilled down low," Wright said. "Bennett, he can take it to the basket, and to go along with Kenny Williams, that gives us some size down low. And to go along with Tyler (Hughes) and Serge (Afeli), that gives us a lot of big men to work with."

While Huggins and company are excited with Bennett's choice, so is his father, Duane.

In fact, when his son waves goodbye to Jacksonville and heads north to Manhattan, Duane said he and his wife will be close behind.

"I'm happy for him. It's his choice, so I'm happy for him," Duane said Wednesday afternoon. "We'll be coming with him, so that's OK. It's always been me and my wife's decision to follow him wherever he went."

Duane and wife would have followed him to Auburn – a school also on Bennett's list – had his son chosen to play there next year, Duane said.

RCPD arrests 2 for drugs

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Zacari Smoove and Daniel Elkins were arrested on drug charges Tuesday at 2215 College Ave., said Lt. Michael Quintanar of the Riley County Police Department.

Smoove was arrested for possession of ecstasy with intent to distribute, unlawful acquisition of drug proceeds, possession of marijuana with intent to distribute, possession of drug paraphernalia, criminal possession of a firearm, no Kansas drug tax stamp and possession of marijuana, Quintanar said.

The firearms found included two semi-automatic handguns and ammunition.

Recovered from the house was about $8,320 worth of ecstasy and about $320 and $7,640 worth of marijuana.

Elkins was arrested for possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia.

Bond was set for Elkins at $1,000.

Bond for Smoove was set at $20,000.

Woman reports rape

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An incident of forcible rape was reported to the Riley County Police Department on Tuesday, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

The alleged rape occurred sometime between April 8 and April 9 in the southwest part of Manhattan, Quintanar said.

The incident involved a 21-year-old female and a male she knew, Quintanar said.

This is not related to the series of five rapes that have occurred in Manhattan in recent years, Quintanar said.

Easter Bunny balances college, visiting with children

There is a place that has the power to stop children in their paths and bring a smile to their faces.

Some stand in line, bouncing with excitement to meet the furry white figure. Others attempt to crawl over the white picket fence that surrounds his domain.

The Easter Bunny sits in the center court of Manhattan Town Center, waiting to meet children of all ages.

Two-month-old Lincon Bailey calmly sat on the Easter Bunny's lap while the photographer shook a rattle to get his attention.

Bailey's parents bought a picture of him with the bunny to show family members.

Eleven-year-old Brianna also saw the Easter Bunny, but from a distance. Brianna didn't want to visit the bunny because she said she only likes Santa Claus and Disney characters.

"He's a little creepy," Brianna said about the bunny. "He's just like a big furry thing waving at me."

Besides visiting with kids and hiding eggs this year, the Easter Bunny has more to do. He is studying criminology at K-State.

"I'm just trying to do the normal college thing," the Easter Bunny said, "so that I can get out of here in four years."

When the bunny isn't taking pictures with kids or going to school, he said he likes to hang out with his friends in his fraternity and his girlfriend.

The bunny said he was approached for the position by some of his friends who were a part of the Santa Claus setup last December.

The Easter Bunny said he enjoys the experience because there are a lot of perks to the job.

"I get paid to sit around, wave at people in the mall and take pictures with kids," he said. "And it's fun to see all the little kids that get so excited to see the Easter Bunny."

The only requirement to be the Easter Bunny at the mall is that the applicant must be more than 18 years old. The applicant goes through an interview process and fills out paperwork, said Betsy Gilbert, location manager for Santa Plus.

"After we look over the paperwork, we check the applicant's references and their availability," Gilbert said.

Gilbert said the characteristics she looks for when hiring bunnies differ and include being able to cope with wearing a suit.

"They also have to be patient and be able to tolerate the kids who get scared of a life-size bunny," she said.

She said it is the job of the photographer to help calm the kids when they become scared and cry.

The photographer goes through a similar hiring process, said Sara Van Allen,

48 cases of mumps reported

By Christina Hansen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

An outbreak of the mumps is quickly spreading through several northern Kansas counties.

According to the Topeka Capital-Journal, as of Tuesday afternoon, 48 confirmed cases of the mumps had been reported to the Kansas Department of Health and Environment. Thirty-seven of these cases came from Douglas County, while others came from Geary, Johnson, Leavenworth, Norton, Saline and Shawnee counties.

Kathy Dicky-Wilson, nursing director at the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department, said no cases have been confirmed in Riley County.

"There is not a case yet," she said. "There is one suspected case from this county, but there has been no confirmation – just testing."

Reported cases in Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska are part of the biggest mumps outbreak in the United States in the past 17 years. According to the University Daily Kansan, Douglas County last experienced a large outbreak of 269 mumps cases between October 1988 and April 1989.

The Daily Kansan also reported that out of more than 350 mumps cases that have been reported in Iowa, 68 percent of patients had received the recommended measles, mumps, rubella vaccination.

Dicky-Wilson said this was also true for many mumps patients throughout Kansas.

"No vaccine is 100 percent effective, including the MMR," she said. "There has been a pretty good percentage of people who have had two doses of the vaccine and still gotten the mumps."

The mumps is a viral infection of the salivary glands characterized by symptoms including headaches, fevers and swelling in the jaw area, according to the Lawrence Journal-World. The virus is passed through saliva, and is generally contagious for four to five days after symptoms have disappeared.

The mumps is generally not a serious disease, although in rare cases the virus can result in meningitis or encephalitis in patients. Frequent hand-washing is recommended as one of the best ways to protect against the virus.

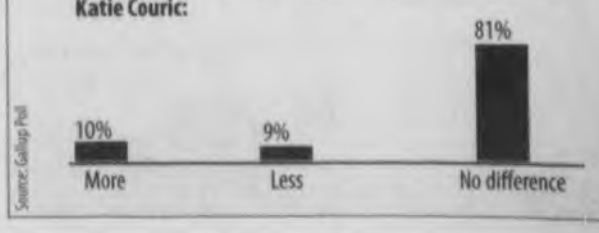
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Murder charge dropped

HAYS, Kan. — A man suspected in the 1978 slaying of a Kansas teenager will not stand trial for first-degree murder, although authorities say new DNA evidence linked him to the crime. Huron Fields, 57, of Atwater, Calif., would have been eligible for parole immediately, based on time served, if he were convicted of first-degree murder. However, the case was dismissed Wednesday because of a plea deal made in another case more than 25 years ago.

Shops searched for files

BAGRAM, Afghanistan — A shopkeeper outside the U.S.-led coalition headquarters in Afghanistan was selling computer memory drives Wednesday containing seemingly sensitive military data stolen from inside the base, including the Social Security numbers of four American generals. This shopkeeper was not the only merchant in local bazaars trying to get some cash in exchange for hardware and software containing such files.



Soldier death toll for April surpasses March numbers

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Four more American soldiers were killed in Iraq, the U.S. military said as the U.S. death toll for the month surpassed the total for all of March. More than 40 Iraqis also died, including at least 22 in a car bombing near a Shiite mosque northeast of Baghdad.

Book sale raises $8K for library

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

Kreg Calhoon, junior in biology, looks through a box of books during the Hale Library book sale Wednesday afternoon. It was the last day for the sale, and boxes of books went for $5.

By Lacey D. Mackey
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Happy customers carried away boxes of books on the last day of the 17th Annual Friends of the KSU Libraries book sale Wednesday afternoon.

On the last day of the sale, Karen McCulloh, assistant to the dean at Hale Library, said she thought more than $8,000 would be raised to help Hale.

The sale began Saturday during the All-University Open House and ended Wednesday.

At the end of the sale, people could fill up a box of books for $5. Earlier in the week, hardcover books and textbooks were sold for $4, and paperback and fiction books were sold for 50 cents to $1.50.

Watching people search through the books, McCulloh said one woman found a treasure earlier in the sale when she obtained some videos she had wanted and could only find for $60 on the Internet.

McCulloh said providing books to faculty and students was like being Santa Claus at Christmas.

"You really see a lot of pleased customers," she said. "It's just really good to see students reading and interested."

While browsing through books on Wednesday, Lauren Davis, sophomore in open option, said she didn't come to the sale looking for anything specific but had heard about the inexpensive books available.

Davis said she liked having her money help Hale.

"I like that my money is actually going to a good cause," she said. "I can see my money helping out."

Friends of the KSU Libraries helped fund several items for, and additions to, Hale through fundraisers like the book sale, including purchasing a portable audio system and helping renovate the Hemisphere Room and Great Room kitchens.

As a volunteer for the book sale, Barbara Newhouse, associate director of Academic Programs and Educational Communications Center, said the sale has become a tradition for her, and she has enjoyed working for the sale.

"Books are donated and resold at very reasonable prices," she said. "It's a win-win situation for the library and the community."

New ID cards to use random numbers

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students will be issued new K-State student ID cards next week with different, randomly assigned numbers that will replace the Social Security number on many cards.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said security concern was one of the main reasons why social security numbers no longer will be used as student ID numbers on cards.

"We've moved to using a random number because security is an important issue for students and all of campus," Bosco said.

Changing the student numbers is part of a conversion plan, Bosco said.

"We believe the elimination of the use of Social Security numbers will help with security," Bosco said.

Students and faculty will be able to obtain new ID cards next week, according to the day's schedule in which their last name falls. Cards will be issued from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the K-State Student Union staterooms each day.

"One of the key changes to the new ID cards is appearance," said Craig Johnson, assistant director of the K-State Student Union.

The new IDs will use the student pictures that are on current IDs and, most likely, will be given to students and faculty the day they come in.

"At least 90 percent of people will leave with their new cards in hand," Johnson said.

Old ID cards will not be retained, and new cards will be effective May 22. Johnson said students and faculty will use their old cards until then.

"Since we won't be collecting the old cards, I recommend destroying them after May 22 for security reasons," he said.

Students and faculty are encouraged to come in early on the day they get their cards.

Amanda Josserand, sophomore in pre-journalism and mass communications, said she is worried waiting in line for a new ID will be chaotic.

"I've already had to get a new one this year," she said. "I don't want to have to wait in line for a long time."

Although Johnson said he couldn't predict how long people will have to wait in line, he said his staff is doing everything it can to minimize the amount of waiting time.

If people have questions, Johnson suggested visiting the K-State ID Center Web site or calling (785) 532-6399.

Speech to address choices for better health

By Alex Peak
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sue Borra, the executive vice president of the International Food Information Council in Washington, D.C., will make a presentation, "Inspiring Consumers to Better Health: Mastering Nutrition and Food Communications," at 1:30 p.m. today in Forum Hall of the K-State Student Union.

The speech will address childhood obesity and consumers, said Deborah Canter, professor and department head of hotel, restaurant, institution management and dietetics.

Canter said the speech is something that can apply to everyone, even those outside of nutrition and dietetics.

"This is a pertinent topic today," Canter said. "The public is encouraged to come."

Borra has worked in the field of dietetics for a long time and has an interesting perspective, Canter said. Canter also said she considers the subject something to which many people can relate.

"All of us eat," she said. "And all of us are concerned about health."

Carol Shanklin, associate dean for the research and graduate school, said she thinks Borra is knowledgeable about this area, and she encourages people to attend the event.

"This particular individual (Borra) is very qualified to speak about this and will be interesting and informative," Shanklin said.

Shanklin also said there will be an opportunity for students to ask Borra questions after the presentation.

Borra's presentation is part of the 32nd-annual Grace M. Shugart lecture series, which brings in professionals from areas relevant to the Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics, each year to speak on campus.

RCPD meets to assess county needs, studies manpower

By Lola Shrimplin
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Riley County Police Department has had four community meetings to assess the needs of residents of Riley County.

Overall, the meetings were very positive, RCPD Director Mike Watson said Tuesday, "I think it was a good process," Watson said.

Police have seen more traffic problems in the south county area, and people at the meetings asked police to work on these issues, Watson said.

The south county area encompasses everything south of Manhattan and Kansas Highway 18, Lt. Michael Quintanar of the RCPD said.

In 2005, there were 1,700 calls for service in the south county area, and more than 1,000 of these were traffic calls, Watson said.

Watson proposed changing to a traffic officer in that area to address those concerns.

Some issues discussed were drug crimes, school resource officers, funeral escorts, sex offenders and planning and zoning, Watson said.

Also discussed was the possibility of adding five new patrol officers, one new civil process officer to serve warrants, and one victims assistant.

The RCPD is doing another manpower study now, Watson said.

The RCPD is studying crimes, calls for service and how long it takes for an officer to arrive, Watson said.

The RCPD uses a priority system through which, more severe cases, like battery and assault, are taken before theft, Watson said.

In 2004, there were 17 index crimes in southern Riley County, which increased to 29 in 2005.

Nine of those were gas driveoffs, Quintanar said.

Crimes reported were murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft and auto theft, Watson said.

Good hygiene, vaccine protect against mumps

Although a mumps vaccine is not required by K-State, students might want to consider getting one in light of recent cases discovered in Kansas.

There have been 48 confirmed mumps cases in Kansas, and the Riley County-Manhattan Health Department said there is one suspected case in Riley County.

Good hygiene is the most effective tool in protecting yourself against the saliva-transmitted virus.

Hand-washing is the easiest way to practice good hygiene. Often, we catch common colds and viruses because we did not take the time to wash our hands after using the bathroom, before eating and after sneezing or coughing.

Another way to avoid getting the mumps is to avoid sharing things with friends that could put you in contact with their saliva. This includes sharing drinks, lip balm and food.

It also might be a good idea to avoid kissing and other intimate activities with someone unless you are certain he or she does not have the virus.

Mumps symptoms are similar to symptoms of influenza, which include headaches, fevers and jaw-area swelling.

If students start to notice these symptoms, they should talk to a doctor and determine if they have the mumps virus. Early detection can prevent spreading the virus to other students.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Gender discrepancy

Sex of teacher should not factor into charges pressed or dropped

LOLA SHRIMPLIN

A Florida teacher admitted to having sexual relations several times with a 14-year-old student, and dropped charges to protect the student, who didn't want to testify in front of the media, according to Agence France Presse.

In another case, a part-time teacher at Cesar Chavez Middle School in Union City, Calif., has been charged with various sex crimes after police learned he had an intimate relationship with a student, according to insidebayarea.com.

The difference in these two cases is that the teacher in Florida is a woman.

Debra LaFave, 25, earlier admitted to having sex several times with her student in 2004, including inside the classroom and inside a car driven by the victim's brother.

The interesting thing about the case, besides the teacher having sex with her student, is the way she is described.

"The attractive blonde, blue-eyed teacher" is what the AFP article called LaFave.

Yet the teacher in Union City, who received nude photographs from the student via the Internet and had discussions about oral sex, according to insidebayarea.com., was never described.

LaFave's attorney actually used her looks in his defense arguments, telling the court she should not be put in jail because she was too beautiful.

"To place an attractive young woman in that kind of hell-hole is like putting a piece of raw meat in with the lions," he told the court.

Why is it different?

Why do people look for excuses from female teachers when they have relations with a student, yet if a male teacher does it he is condemned automatically?

LaFave blamed her behavior on bipolar disorder.

Bipolar disorder has varying graduations, but in general they all include periods of highs that alternate with periods of lows, said Dorinda Lambert, licensed psychologist and associate director for clinical services for University Counseling Services.

"Poor decision-making or impulsive actions alone does not warrant a diagnosis of bipolar disorder," Lambert said.

Like many words and phrases used today, the term "bipolar" can be misused and misrepresented, Lambert said.

"Professional assessment is needed to determine the presence of such a disorder," she said.

I'm hesitant to say this teacher isn't bipolar, but it seems a little late in the game to try that defense.

When you use something like this as the reason you commit a crime, and it was a crime, you run the risk of making people who genuinely suffer from a disease look like sex-crazed maniacs who can't control themselves around children.

After all, LaFave scarred a 14-year-old child so badly he was fearful to go to trial because of the media coverage involved.

It's common to hear that boys dream of something like what happened between her and this boy, and I'm sure some do. Some girls do the same.

But I'm also sure it's still a violation of innocence.

And in no case is it all right for a teacher to have sexual relations with a student.

The question remains, however, why are female teachers treated differently? Why are they asked for an excuse?

Does the California teacher get to use an excuse? Did anyone ask him why he did it or try to form a defense related to his attractiveness?

Maybe he was schizophrenic.

Did anyone ask?

Or does it even matter?

Predators are predators, no matter what they look like or what medication they say they need to be on.

Free speech, privacy protections decline

ZACHARY T. ECKELS

One of my favorite pictures of all time is an old black and white shot of Woody Guthrie.

Staring blankly at the camera, he's blowing out a drag of the cigarette he's holding in his left hand. His acoustic guitar seems to float in front of him with the words "This machine kills fascists" boldly painted in capital letters.

The thought of Guthrie passionately playing songs on this guitar, like "This Land is Your Land," makes me long to go back in time.

I'd love to be able to travel back to a time when free speech was welcomed in our country. Now, many people don't even realize he wrote this tune, which today is a camp sing-along, to protest class inequality. Even more surprising to some would be that it was Guthrie's negative response to "God Bless America."

It's almost hard to believe there was a time in the United States when free speech was valued so highly. That a song rivaling "God Bless America" could become such a loved folk song. A time when a musician could speak out against the wrongdoings of a country without being labeled anti-American.

In fact, our world has changed so dramatically since this time that newspapers reported last week that a man in England was dragged off a plane for simply listening to music from The Clash and Led Zeppelin.

According to a Reuters article, on his way to the airport, Harraj Mann, a man of Indian origin and a mobile phone salesman, wanted the same comfort we all need at times: to have his music playing on a taxi ride to the airport. Using his MP3 player, Mann sang along to songs from The Clash and the Beatles.

The cab driver alerted police upon hearing lyrics such as: "London calling from the faraway towns, now war is declared and battle come down. London calling to the underworld, come out of the cupboard, you boys and girls" from The Clash.

Taking the music complaint seriously, Durham Police proceeded to search his bags after removing Mann from the plane. After finding nothing out of place, Mann said he was then asked every question you can think of.
By the time the police were done, Mann had missed his flight.

With the magnitude of terrorist strikes in recent years, it is understandable that we have to take threats much more seriously than in the past. But doing so still requires that we to protect the private lives of the innocent.

We have to be able to realize when someone is being stereotyped and when someone might actually be a threat.

Imagine, for instance, a country where the fascists could openly attack the machine they've feared for so long. It would be a country where you had to hide the fact you enjoy songs with lyrics that can be taken the wrong way.

This invasion of privacy could travel down the slippery slope quickly.

Just looking at lyrics, like the cab driver in England, many of your favorite artists could be at risk. A while back I took a quiz that proved Simon and Garfunkel lyrics easily can be mistaken for Marilyn Manson.

As Americans, we should be proud that a news story like this hasn't reared its ugly head in our country yet.

I fear that allowing such things to happen could quickly lead to a time when we can be detained for the clothes we wear, our hairstyles or even just being in a bad mood.

Speech lessons focus on connections to others, self

By Megan Molitor
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

When Sean Stephenson was born, his parents were told he would not live past his first 24 hours.

But Stephenson had other plans. He overcame a medical condition that made his bones extremely fragile and became a board-certified therapist. He began giving motivational speeches across the country, the most recent being at K-State on Wednesday evening.

Stephenson spoke to about 50 students in the K-State Student Union in a speech titled "Time to Stand."

"This program is not about me, it's about you," he said. "I urge you to be selfish and ask yourself one question: 'What does this mean to me, and how can I use it?'"

Stephenson used seven standing lessons to explain how audience members can improve their lives.

His first lesson instructed listeners to master the art of connection. He said one must step out of one's own mind, ask quality questions of people and actually listen to the response.

"It's not always about connections with people you like," Stephenson said. "It's about the people that drive you nuts. You need to have the ability to step out of your comfort zone and connect with people that may be tough to reach."

Other standing lessons included being willing to be compassionate, being mindful of one's beliefs and watching comments about oneself.

"If we talked to our friends like we do the voice in our heads, I believe nobody would have any friends at all," Stephenson said. "If we don't take control of that voice, it will take control of us. Just changing one word in your description of yourself can be very powerful."

Stephenson also spoke about taking responsibility for one's own life and for the people by whom one is surrounded. He said people should look for the funny side of a stressful situation.

"We need to be able to laugh at our stress and to stop taking ourselves so seriously," he said. "Realize that humor is a powerful tool. College is supposed to be a joy, so enjoy it."

Members of the audience said Stephenson's speech was motivational.

"I didn't know what to expect, but I found it to be really enjoyable," Audrey Smith, senior in elementary education, said. "I felt like he related well to us, and we could relate to him. I thought he would focus on his obstacles in his own life, but he chose to look at the big picture for everyone."

Others said the speech taught them about themselves.

"I came out of curiosity, and I loved it," Andrew Prignitz, junior in finance, said. "I learned that the human mind is very powerful, and you get out of your own life what you put in your own mind."

Mini triathlon diversifies fort activities

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Fort Riley Sports Department will have a Mini Splashin' Dash Triathlon on April 29.

Kim Clark, Fort Riley Sports Department clerk, said the mini-triathlon will consist of a 300-meter swim, a seven-mile bike ride and a two-mile run.

Clark said the competition is open to everyone, but participants younger than 18 years old need an adult with them.

Hedy Noveroske, Fort Riley Sports Department swimming program manager, said the mini-triathlon is the first in many years.

Noveroske said the beginning event, the 300-meter swim, will not be too strenuous.

"We didn't want to make it too intimidating," Noveroske said.

Noveroske said the department hopes for 150 individuals and 50 teams to participate.

Noveroske said medals will be awarded to the top three finishers in each gender and age category. An overall first place award also will be awarded.

Kim Miller, Fort Riley Sports Department fitness program manager, said the department decided to have the triathlon to add something new to the post.

"It's a good way to bring together everyone in the community," Miller said.

Miller said the different directors of the sports department met to decide the distances of the events.

"We had to look at the resources we have at Fort Riley, and also decide where the events would take place," Miller said.

Tricycle race to fund leadership studies scholarships

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Leadership Studies and Program ambassadors will have a trike-a-thon to raise money for scholarships for leadership studies minors.

Russell Thompson, senior in computer engineering and fund-raising chair for the trike-a-thon, said the event is a tricycle relay race for people in the Manhattan area and surrounding communities.

Thompson said the race is for anyone 5 years or older, and teams of four will compete against one another in heats.

He said teams must provide their own tricycle and decorate it for the race.

"There are three categories of winners for the race," Thompson said. "Trophies are awarded for the best decoration of tricycle, for the most money raised and for whoever wins the race."

There is an entry fee of $500 per team, and the teams can raise the money for the fee, Thompson said.

Steven Robinson, director of development for College of Education, also is helping with the event.

He said last year the group had a 5K walk, but this year there are several other organizations having walks.

Although this is the organization's first time hosting a trike-a-thon, Robinson said he has experience with the event due to past organization fundraisers.

Ella Todd, sophomore in marketing and Leadership Studies ambassador, said the event tentatively has 19 teams and is looking to make the cutoff at 20.

"We encourage any organizations on campus to participate, too," Todd said.

She said the organization would like students to come to watch the event.

"We'd really like the support," Todd said. "There will be a live DJ and hopefully refreshments of some sort."

Combining cultures

Christopher Hanewinckel | COLLEGIAN

The women's tennis team is composed of eight players from five different countries: Argentina, Venezuela, the Czech Republic, Georgia and Russia.

Nicknames unify women's tennis players, highlight athletes' backgrounds

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The name Papo quickly is becoming synonymous with K-State women's tennis.

Go to a match, and you will hear several Wildcat tennis players cheering for her.

Recently she has become a fan favorite, with spectators cheering her name.

So who is she?

"Everybody is a Papo here," sophomore Fernanda Da Valle said.

Papo is a common nickname from Da Valle's hometown of Mendoza, Argentina.

"It is a pretty funny word, but it doesn't mean anything," Da Valle said. "I started using it here, and then everyone started using it."

Even though the word is not in the dictionary, Papo has taken on its own meaning at K-State.

"I think it means 'buddy' or 'girl,'" senior Jessica Simosa said.

However, Da Valle's teammates reserve a different name for her.

"I got my (nickname), Ferdi, when they wrote my name at the (ASU Thunderbird Invitational) bad," Da Valle said. "They put 'Ferdinanda' instead of Fernanda."

Freshman Maria Perevoschikova, the youngest member of the Wildcats, received her alias by virtue of her stature.

"I call her Choochie," sophomore Tamar Kvaratskhelia said. "She's so small and tiny – she's like a baby."

Kvaratskhelia goes by her middle name, Tako, because her first name, Tamar, is popular in her home country of Georgia.

"I don't like Tamar, because since I was born, my parents and everyone was calling me Tako," Kvaratskhelia said. "It's a normal name in my country, like John or Kevin are here in America."

Several other players also carry shortened versions of their real names.

Sophomore Olinka Klimova is more commonly known as Olga; freshman Katerina Kudlackova will answer to Katka, and sophomore Viviana Yrureta is Vivi for short.

The only person who seems to have been left out of the name game is coach Steve Bietau.

"I know that they do it," Bietau said. "I think it is an indication that they are fairly close with each other, and I think it's a good thing, but I am not on the inside of that stuff."

That unity does not end once they leave the court.

"The tennis team is kind of like a second family," Bietau said. "We hang out together and live together, so we have to be close."

Even though the team is represented by eight players from five countries – Da Valle from Argentina; Simosa and Yrureta from Venezuela; Klimova, Kudlackova, sophomore Tereza Prochazkova from the Czech Republic; Kvaratskhelia from Georgia; and Perevoschikova from Russia – Kvaratskhelia said she wishes the team could be even more diverse.

"I would love to have every single player from a different country," Kvaratskhelia said.

The blending of the different countries is not always easy, though, Bietau said.

"You have language issues and cultural issues, and sometimes it makes the communication a real challenge for them, and I know for me," Bietau said. "You are in this intense competitive situation where emotions are at a pretty high level, and you're dealing with a certain amount of stress, so it's a big challenge."

A lot of the tension comes from the differences between Americans and foreigners.

"We are coming to America, so we are the weird ones," Simosa said. "I think it is harder when we have had Americans on our team. It's hard for them to understand us."

The players are close because they share the bond of being so far from home, Simosa said.

"We are all from different countries so if we aren't friends then who are we going to hang out with?" Simosa said.

K-State to face Texas Tech in 3-game series

Staff reports
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State baseball team will travel to Lubbock, Texas, for a three-game series today, Friday and Saturday against the Texas Tech Red Raiders at Dan Law Field.

The Wildcats (22-8, 2-7 Big 12 Conference) are coming off a 5-4 comeback victory against No. 22 Creighton on Tuesday at the Creighton Truman Sports Complex.

K-State rallied from a four-run deficit capped by a ninth-inning two-run home run by junior Jared Goedert to help give the Wildcats a 5-4 victory.

Texas Tech (24-13, 5-6) comes off a 14-7 victory against New Mexico and will look to move to .500 on the season in conference play.

K-State was swept at home in a three-game series against Texas last weekend, and Texas Tech split a two-game series against the Longhorns on March 17-18.

K-State has had four players with 10-game hitting streaks this season. Senior Brandon Farr is riding a 13-game hit streak and is hitting .4469 in that stretch.

Farr tied a career-high against Creighton with four hits, going 4-for-4 on the day.

Senior Joe Roundy hit a solo homer to improve his team lead in homers to five.

Roundy has hit safely in 25 of this season's 30 games, which includes two hits against Creighton.

Senior Barrett Rice has hit safely in 23 of his last 25 games and currently is leading the Big 12 with a .435 average. Rice also is riding an eight-game hitting streak.

Texas Tech played Kansas in a three-game series last weekend and came out with only one victory.

The Red Raiders took two of three games from Baylor on March 31-April 2 and lost two of three to Texas A&M on March 24-26.

The first two games of the Wildcat-Red Raider series will begin at 6:30 tonight, with the final game at 2 p.m. Saturday.

Bonds' feats should overshadow steroid allegations

CEDRIQUE FLEMMING

Barry Lamar Bonds is chasing one of the most coveted records in all of professional sports – the homerun record.

Bonds is the left-fielder for the San Francisco Giants and currently is sitting in third place for career homeruns with 708. He is just six behind the infamous Babe Ruth (714) and 47 behind Homerun King Hank Aaron (755).

We, as a baseball nation, should be celebrating this man's accomplishments and showering him with praise. But for some reason, the baseball society is way too quick to judge people and frowns after every ball he hits out of the park.

I firmly believe in the phrase "innocent until proven guilty," and too many baseball fans have forgotten this concept.

Bonds recently has taken a ton of heat for speculation regarding steroid abuse at some point in his career, especially the year he hit a single-season high of 73 homeruns.

Let me ask you one question, though. Has he ever tested positive for steroids?

The answer is no.

Mark Fainaru-Wada and Lance Williams, writers from the San Francisco Chronicle, recently published a book called "Game of Shadows." The book outlines in detail Bonds' alleged steroid use.

Did they see him do it?

Not at all, and, as far as I'm concerned, he never did.

These two guys decided to write a book that would make them a ton of money because everybody would want to read it.

This makes sense to me, because I also like money, and a book like that would bring me a lot more income, which is always nice.

See, anybody can write a book about something, but I'll take concrete drug test results over a biased book written by a couple of haters any day. Those two guys never saw Bonds take steroids, and, again, he has never tested positive.

So until he does, I will always love Bonds. I will always back him and say he is the greatest player ever to play Major League Baseball.

I am privileged to know I will be able to tell my kids about the times I watched Bonds play. Let's look at some of his accomplishments during his long-tenured career, shall we?

He has been selected as an All Star 13 times. He has won a record seven Most Valuable Player awards and eight Gold Glove Awards.

He is the only player in baseball history to have at least 500 homeruns and 500 stolen bases, and no other player has ever reached even 400-400.

What's even more amazing about Bonds' homerun total is that he owns the career record for walks, with more than 2,300. He also owns the top-three single-season intentional walk totals (120, 68, 61), which goes to show people are scared to pitch to the guy and have been for years.

Bonds is rolling on into his 40s now, and his swing is deteriorating, which is apparent in the fact that he has not hit a homerun this season.

But all you Bonds-haters out there need not worry, because his bat is just resting, and it will awaken soon. He will catch Ruth and, hopefully, will stay healthy enough to break Aaron's record.

If he were to catch Aaron, that would be the most memorable moment in sports for me since former Dallas Cowboy all-world running back Emmitt Smith broke the career-rushing record.

Bonds is an amazing athlete, and the only thing I have to say is, "Do your thing, man."

Don't worry about all the haters and keep swinging that bat.

I'll be here rooting for you.

TRK | 2 Wildcats attempt to reset records

K-State will send four of its current athletes and two of its former athletes to the Audrey Walton Combined Events Carnival, taking place today and Friday in Columbia, Mo.

The delegation of K-State athletes attending the Combined Events Carnival will be senior Breanna Eveland, sophomore Marianne Schlachter and assistant coach Austra Skujyte in the women's decathlon, senior Tasha Harvey and sophomore Obi Ikwuakor in the heptathlon and Darius Draudvila in the men's decathlon. The Wildcats will also be joined by 2004 Olympian Tom Pappas, who has trained with head coach Cliff Rovelto this season in Manhattan.

Former two-time Wildcat All-American Skujyte will attempt to break her own world record in the women's decathlon in Columbia. Eveland owns the national collegiate record, record for a North American athlete and K-State record in the event.

NFL | Lead prosecutor in Taylor's trial steps aside

MIAMI —The lead prosecutor in the assault case against Washington Redskins safety Sean Taylor stepped aside Wednesday after defense lawyers charged that he was using his prominence in the case to promote his moonlighting work as a nightclub disc jockey.

Taylor

Michael Grieco, the assistant state attorney handling the Taylor case, asked to be replaced because "he sees himself becoming the courtroom focus, rather than the individual charged with the criminal offense," said a statement from the office of his boss, Miami-Dade State Attorney Katherine Fernandez Rundle.

BKC | Turgeon's contract extended 10 years

WICHITA — Wichita State rewarded Mark Turgeon with a big raise and a 10-year contract extension for leading the Shockers to the NCAA regional semifinals for the first time since 1981.

Turgeon

The contract, signed Tuesday, provides a base salary of $750,000 per year, raising Turgeon's annual salary by $290,000 and making him one of the highest-paid coaches in the Missouri Valley Conference. It supersedes an extension he signed last year, which ran through 2010.

Turgeon announced Monday that he was staying at Wichita State.

BOX | Louis remembered on 25th anniversary

ARLINGTON, Va. — With the laying of a wreath and the playing of taps, Joe Louis was remembered at Arlington National Ceremony on Wednesday on the 25th anniversary of the boxing great's death.

Louis

Family and friends gathered at Louis' grave, beneath the long branches of a splendid oak tree not far from the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier. "The Brown Bomber," the nickname etched on his tombstone, was remembered as a black sports hero who transcended the divisions of race in the segregated 1930s and 1940s.

Louis was heavyweight champion from 1937 to 1949. His most memorable victory came on June 22, 1938, when he avenged a loss to Germany's Max Schmeling with a first-round knockout at Yankee Stadium, a blow to Adolf Hitler's campaign for Aryan supremacy.

Views on sexuality kept quiet, differ as tradition collides with changing modern ideals

By Jonas Hogg
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mark Twain once opined, "It is not immoral to create the human species – with or without ceremony." The human species, it seems, is inclined to agree.

However, the act of creating the human species has become far more than simple procreation. The variances in sexuality and relationships around the globe reflect the multitude of cultures that comprise the world.

As world cultures and religions rise and fall, so, too, do attitudes toward sex and romance.

The ancient Greeks saw homosexuality between a male teacher and a male pupil as a normal relationship. Pagan fertility rituals have involved orgies at times. And, according to a USA Today article, as recent as 2005, there have been polygamy (multiple spouses) charges brought against men and women living in rural areas of the United States.

For all its press, issues of sexuality remain largely private affairs, spoken of only to close friends and family, if at all. But as attitudes change, more people are willing to discuss issues of sex in their societies.

Ziad, who gave only his first name, spoke of changes in his native country of Lebanon. The country, located on the Mediterranean Sea, is a mix of Arab and Christian cultures. These cultures bring conservative ideals that can conflict with newer, more open ideas toward sexuality.

"That's the thing with having a mixed society of religions. Religion is very powerful – whether Christian or Muslim," he said.

Despite close proximity, Ziad said romantic relations between Christian and Muslim believers are quite rare.

As younger generations become exposed to more western ideas of sexuality via the Internet and popular culture, it can create tension between youth and their parents.

Despite some changes in attitude, there are some institutions that remain static. Traditional marriage is practiced in Lebanon but not in the same legalistic manner as in the United States.

"It's not civil marriage, it's only religious marriage," Ziad said.

Marriage is performed in religious centers along with divorces. This fact keeps divorce rates, and opinions about divorce, low.

Across Asia, the rapidly modernizing nation of China faces similar questions as tradition collides with modern ideals.

The Chinese K-State student interviewed did not wish to be named and will be referred to as Chris.

Chris said Western ideas of casual dating and romance do not clash with Chinese tradition, they just don't quite fit.

"It's not really part of the culture," Chris said.

As a culture that emphasizes politeness and ritual, Chris said flirting is more likely to involve comments and compliments rather than a direct approach.

Although youth in modern China are more likely to date than their parents were a generation ago, Chris said dating and romance still are seen as movements toward marriage rather than social experiences.

But have Western ideas of attractiveness penetrated China?

Chris said that while there are some aspects of "westernization," like China's own Budweiser girls, many more modest ideals of beauty survive.

Chris said China has seen an increase in sexuality and sexual expression, largely due to the anonymity of the Internet. However, marriage is still an integral part of traditional family values and day-to-day life.

"They think it's part of your happiness," Chris said.

Some at K-State are examining the "why" of relationships and sexuality rather than simply the "how."

Janet Benson, associate professor of anthropology, teaches a course titled "Male and Female: Gender in Cross-Cultural Perspective." For Benson, the question is, "Why do we find things the way we do in different countries?"

As an example, in some areas of the globe a form of marriage known as polyandry is practiced. Under polyandry, an elder brother will take a wife and, in doing so, will invite his younger brothers to share the house, the community and the wife.

Such practices generally are found in areas where land is not abundant and cannot support a large population.

Some traditions, Benson said, can be difficult for outsiders to understand or accept.

Under polyandry, an elder brother will take a wife and, in doing so, will invite his younger brothers to share the house, the community and the wife.

One such tradition was researched in a series of studies published by anthropologist Gilbert Herdt in 1993. The study examined homosexual traditions of some tribesmen in and around New Guinea. In the study Herdt detailed rituals where young boys consume the semen of elder tribesmen, which is believed to be a conduit of masculine energy.

"You come to understand things from the perspectives of people that are different from yourself," Benson said. "You may disagree with them. You may, in fact, have your own values called into question, and you may be shocked. But you eventually come to understand, 'This is not my perspective. This is their perspective. This is how they see it; this is how they feel.'"

When it comes to understanding the aspects of any culture, Benson said grasping cultural issues takes time and a willingness to look beyond what is presented to confront controversial issues.

"You have to be patient," she said. "It takes a long time to understand."

Admire natural beauty, not just celebrities' looks

ANNETTE LAWLESS

My body is a temple. And I expect everyone to worship it.

Well, maybe they don't need to worship it.

From the curvy shape to my fabulous hair – I just can't get enough of it. I love my body.

There are times, however, I have said otherwise.

In our society, people constantly judge us. They remind us of our insecurities about our bodies and minds – to be quite honest, I am sick of it.

I am tired of watching television or listening to the radio with people telling me, "You're too fat. You're too thin. You eat too much. You don't exercise enough. Your legs are too stubby. Your butt is too big. Your eyes are too small. You don't eat enough. You have too much acne. Your teeth are too yellow."

I mean, sure, everyone wants to look like a celebrity. Every now and then, I think I'd like to be the beautiful Charlize Theron or Eva Longoria.

But then I stop to think.

Since when is it wrong for people to start acting like themselves?

If I were making millions and millions of dollars every year, perhaps I, too, could afford to have the body of a goddess.

Things would be that much simpler, you know, with a hair stylist, makeup artist and assistant waiting on you hand and foot.

Once you take away their money and their status, I bet these celebrities would look a little more like us.

After all, if you look at the case of what some of these people looked like in high school, I bet many of them looked just a little too common.

This is the world we live in, however, where men and women are supposed to be insecure with their bodies. Celebrities are on the forefront.

For common people like me, being beautiful is going to cost a little more than a tube of mascara, no matter what those celebrities endorse.

When we see gorgeous couples like Angelina Jolie and Brad Pitt, I can't help but wonder what kind of sex lives beautiful people must have.

After all, beautiful people should have beautiful sex, right?

With the busy lives they lead, however, I bet celebrities don't have it made.

Do you honestly think they truly know each other by only seeing one another four months out of the year?

Beyond the glitz and glam of Hollywood, the most beautiful people are right before you. He is sitting next to you in class. She's the woman in the apartment next to yours.

That's something to think about. These are the people you should admire.

We are real people living real lives.

We might not have a mansion or millions of dollars to back us up, but we are naturally beautiful people who should naturally admire ourselves.

And I think us common people should start admiring each other instead of a celebrity's pretty face.

Student Senate to choose new chair

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Student Senate will choose its new chair tonight.

Nominations for Senate chair were made at the first meeting of the 2006-07 term last Thursday. Joe Vossen, Ashley Boldt and Nick Levendofsky were nominated.

Vossen, junior in political science, withdrew his nomination and said he supports Boldt.

Boldt, junior in family studies and human services, has served as a Senate intern, intern coordinator and College of Human Ecology senator.

Boldt ran for student body president this year and finished third in the primary election. She was re-elected as a College of Human Ecology senator.

Levendofsky is a junior in agribusiness. He has served as a Senate intern and College of Agriculture senator. He did not run for Senate this year.

Bill Muir, faculty representative to Senate, said the Senate seat of the new chair will be considered vacant.

The person who finished next in line during elections will be sworn in as the new college senator at the April 20 Senate meeting, Muir said.

Muir said he has seen a tie for Senate chair happen five times in 13 years. The chair only votes in the event of a tie, he said.

Tyson Moore and Matt King tied in April 2005 with 28 votes each. Former Senate Chair Eleri Griffin broke the tie by choosing Moore.

The chair will receive $4,682 in a scholarship and compensation for the 2006-07 term.

Moore, senior in information systems, said the chair's responsibilities include preparations for Senate meetings.

The chair serves as chair of the SGA Executive Committee, which is composed of the chairs of the standing committees, intern coordinator, Faculty Senate representative and vice chair.

"It's a pretty major time commitment," Moore said. "It's one step down from being student body president."

K-State asks for cable service bids

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Students living in the residence halls at the University of Oklahoma will pay less for their cable TV.

The University of Oklahoma Board of Regents awarded a contract to Cox Communications Inc. that will reduce cable bills for Oklahoma housing residents by almost one-third, according to a March 23 report in the Oklahoma Daily.

The contract will implement bulk billing of cable TV for all residence halls, and the residents will pay the bursar for cable instead of contracting individually with Cox, according to the report.

Jerry Marrow, network service technician for K-State Telecommunications, said K-State students living in the residence halls pay for cable individually, not through bulk billing.

"It has been this way since 1999, when the cable system first started," Marrow said.

Marrow said K-State has the contract set up so students can be billed for services they want.

"This way students that do not want cable TV don't have to pay for it," Marrow said.

According to the K-State Telecommunications Web site, students can purchase basic cable service for $20 or premium service for $35.

Additional channels can be added to the premium service for additional charges.

Braden Turner, freshman in mechanical engineering, said he has cable in the residence halls, and he gets several bills a month for different services in the residence halls.

"I think having the price for cable included would be a lot better because all the different bills for different things can be confusing," Turner said. "And sometimes I don't know which service the money is going to."

Marrow said K-State has recently asked for bids from cable services for the residence halls.

He said the current cable service provider is Lamont Digital Systems, but there are no renewals for the five-year contract.

Sarah Kauffman, public affairs manager for Cox Communications Inc., said Cox has submitted a bid.

"We're very excited about submitting the bid," Kauffman said. "We have a very good quality of service."

Kauffman said Cox is a good choice for K-State because the two have a lot of the same philosophies. Cox concentrates on youth, education and equality, she said.

The contract at Oklahoma is an agreement between the university and Cox, Kauffman said.

She said if Cox gets the bid for K-State, the university then will then decide the terms of the contract, including the decision to have bulk billing.

"It is a possibility," Kauffman said. "But what happens with the University of Oklahoma is different than what would happen with K-State. The contract varies across the board, and it depends on K-State and their decision."

EASTER BUNNY| Job requires patience, ability to work with children, willingness to wear suit marketing manager for Manhattan Town Center.

"The photographer can answer the same ad put out for the Easter Bunny and then go through the same process," Van Allen said. "The photographer goes through a kind of training as well."

Van Allen said children of all ages are welcome to visit the bunny, and photo packages are available.

Brooke Carney, freshman in pre-journalism and mass communications, said the display is the first she has ever seen, but she will not visit the bunny this year.

"I probably wouldn't get my picture taken with the bunny," Carney said. "But the decorations and setup are cute and fit the spring season."

BENNETT | Huggins' reputation draws recruits

After visiting Auburn on March 14, Bennett said he enjoyed his trip, but because of Huggins – to whom Bennett committed in fall 2004 when Huggins was still at Cincinnati – and K-State's reputation, Bennett chose to be a Wildcat rather than a Tiger, Duane said.

"He liked Bob Huggins, and he liked some of the attention he got," Duane said. "(He thought) K-State was a bigger basketball school than Auburn because it's more of a football school."

The Bennett family might not be in Manhattan too long, however, considering Bennett plans to leave for the NBA in two years, Morgan said.

"The game plan is to be there two years and go to the NBA, which is realistic," Morgan said. "I don't think coach Huggins expects him to be there four."

Right now, that doesn't matter. Bennett's announcement created a buzz on campus, and students generally seem pleased with K-State's newest recruit.

"It's a good sign for the program that Huggins is going to be able to bring in this caliber of player," Owen McGuire, senior in architecture, said. "I almost feel sorry for KU that their program has taken a turn for the worst."

Recruiting is one thing that will come easier at K-State because just mentioning Huggins' name will entice players to come to Manhattan, assistant coach Dalonte Hill said.

"It's (working for Huggins) opened up a recruiting basis, no knock on Charlotte," Hill said on Monday. "But I had to recruit in the 50s to 100s at Charlotte, and now I can recruit 1-100. We didn't get the exposure that Big 12 schools and a coach like Bob Huggins get."

Assistant coach Frank Martin also said Huggins is the best recruiting tool because of his nationwide reputation of being a coach who can make any player better. K-State has not been synonymous with basketball success since the 1980s, but that soon will change, Martin said.

"I work for a Hall of Fame coach, and what he has done in the past, as far as developing players as players, and more importantly, men, is something that is known from coast to coast," Martin said on Monday. "This is a beautiful community, and when you put those things together, good things will happen."

Duane said he believes Huggins creates a bright future for K-State basketball.

"With Bob Huggins, he (Bennett) knows he's going to get the program going," Duane said. "K-State will be the best in the Big 12 in about a year."

MUMPS | Virus vaccination recommended for K-State students confirmed mumps patients are students at the University of Kansas. According to the University Daily Kansan, three women with probable cases belonged to the same sorority, while two other students, one with a confirmed case and one with a suspected case, lived in university residence halls.

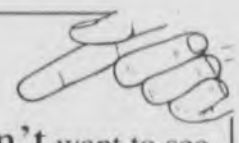
While MMR vaccinations are required for any student attending public schools in Kansas, they are not required for students enrolling at K-State, said Carol Kennedy of the Health Promotions Department of Lafene Health Center.

"We do not require any immunization, although we certainly encourage it," Kennedy said. "The only exception is that a meningitis vaccination is required for any student living in university housing."

Sara Bennett, freshman in social work, said the mumps outbreak worried her because she lives in a residence hall.



"It's really scary because we're all living ridiculously close together, especially because we're sharing bathrooms," she said.

Bennett said the university should do more to alert students to the growing number of mumps cases and how to avoid contracting the virus.

"A list of the symptoms would be very helpful," she said. "Instead of just thinking they had a cold or the flu, students might go to Lafene and get checked out. There's definitely a risk unless we take some precautions to stop it."

Former Polish president addresses battle for democracy in changing world

Former Polish President Lech Walesa speaks during the Landon Lecture Thursday afternoon. Walesa was Poland's first democratically elected president.

By Megan Molitor
K-STATE COLLEGIAN

The United States leads the world economically and militarily, but not necessarily politically, Lech Walesa said Thursday afternoon in McCain Auditorium.

Walesa, former president of Poland, Nobel Peace Prize recipient and key leader of Poland's Solidarity movement, delivered the 144th Landon Lecture.

Before his speech, "Democracy: The Never-Ending Battle," Walesa was introduced by K-State President Jon Wefald.

"This man is a symbol for hope and freedom and was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1983," Wefald said. "He was one of the pivotal leaders of the 1980s and helped to bring down the communist tyranny. He is one of the historical figures of the 20th century."

Walesa helped Polish workers form a union and later was elected as the country's first democratically elected president, a move that earned the country an invitation to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Wefald said.

"Leave some applause for when I finish as well. Let me earn it," Walesa said as audience members stood to applaud him. "I have come to the U.S. frequently, and I hope Americans do not get bored of me."

With the aid of a translator, Walesa said many parts of the world have experienced a lot throughout history, and the leaders of those places have a better sense of future opportunities and of potential dangers and threats.

"The world may not listen to everything people say, but they will listen to those who live in these places, because our world situation is completely new," Walesa said.

Walesa said Poland tried to warn the world that World War II was inevitable, but those warnings were met with resistance.

When communism entered Poland, Walesa said he knew it would not succeed.

"The communist system would not fit any nation in which it was imposed, especially not in Poland," he said. "The Polish people are extremely free souls... If you ever come across two Polish people, you will probably find three political parties among them."

Walesa said he received support from other Polish leaders, but they did not think the country could defeat communism.

He said the election of a Polish pope played a large role in the fall of communism, who visited the country and had a large effect.

"When calculating who contributed to what extent, I have to give 50 percent credit to the pope, 30 percent to Solidarity and myself and 20 percent to countries like the United States," Walesa said.

Walesa said he explained Poland's struggle with communism because it demonstrates why the United States was left as the only superpower in the world.

"As long as there was another superpower, we called it the empire of evil," he said. "If anything bad happened in the world, we could blame it on

Student Senate chooses new chair

By Adrianne DeWeese
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Ashley Boldt was elected as Student Senate's new chair by a vote of 35-22-2 Thursday night.

Boldt
STUDENT SENATE CHAIR

Boldt, outgoing College of Human Ecology senator; Nick Levendofsky, outgoing College of Agriculture senator; and Joe Vossen, outgoing College of Arts and Sciences senator, were nominated for chair at last week's meeting.

Vossen dropped out of the race, but he was unanimously appointed as Attorney General at Thursday's meeting.

Senate members spoke in support of Boldt and Levendofsky prior to voting.

Matt King, outgoing Governmental Relations Committee chair, said Levendofsky has shown solid and consistent leadership during his three years in Senate.

"Throughout his three years, he has demonstrated solid and consistent leadership," King said. "Nick has never hesitated to stand up here and say his position on an issue."

Anthony Carter, outgoing College Council Allocations chair, said Boldt has the ability to bring out the best in people.

"She works very well with other people," Carter said. "Her ability to connect with every single person she comes in contact with is impeccable."

After the decision was made, Boldt was sworn in by outgoing Senate Chair Tyson Moore and took over the meeting. Appointments for vice chair, intern coordinator and Faculty Senate representative were made.

Vice Chair Emily Besler ran unopposed and was unanimously re-elected as vice chair.

After a vote without majority, a second vote of 33-20 declared Taylor Symons, former Senate intern, as intern coordinator. Senators Katie Beye and Molly Hamm ran against Symons.

Gavin Couvelha, former College of Education senator, won Faculty Senate representative with a vote of 39-2-2. Mary Geiger and Tim Weninger ran against Couvelha.

Applications to serve on the cabinet of Student Body President and Vice President Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy, respectively, are due by 4 p.m. today in the Office of Student Activities and Services.

Students can now evaluate instructors, courses online

By Jessi Hernandez
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State teacher evaluations are now available online.

The new feature, which went up Monday, allows students to give evaluations of their courses and instructors and is known as Instructor/Course Evaluations.

Wildcat Information Network, win.ksu.edu, opened the feature for student use, simultaneously fulfilling campaign promises for former student body president and vice president Michael Burns and Grant Groene, respectively, and current Student Body President and vice president Lucas Maddy and Katie Maddy, respectively.

"This has been a campaign issue for a few years for candidates, starting with (former student body president) Hayley Urkevich," Burns said.

"When we took office, we took a report from SGA regarding teacher evaluations and then gave that to the WIN people to see what we could make happen."

Burns said he was not involved specifically with the technical development of ICE, which for the most part was handled by Brett Wolfington, who works for WIN.

Wolfington, senior in computer science, said ICE was in the basic development process for about two years and has only started to become official in the past two months.

Students can access the online evaluations by logging on to WIN, Wolfington said.

"If you don't have a (WIN) account already, it will only take a few minutes to sign up," Wolfington said.

Students can access ICE by clicking on "instructor and course evaluation," which is listed under Community, Wolfington said. Students can then locate the instructor they want to evaluate by conducting a search for the instructor's name or by choosing what subject they teach.

An alphabetical list of all instructors teaching that course subject will then appear, and after clicking on the name of the desired instructor, students can then select the class they want to rate the instructor.

"There's grades for five categories, including speaking skills, organization, etc., that students can grade their teachers on, and there's a survey you can take, and then you can also post comments," Wolfington said.

The survey consists of 14 questions, covering topics such as class size, class format, instructor feedback, how

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS NEWS HIGHLIGHTS

Amber Alert hoax

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. — A popular 16-year-old girl's tale that she was kidnapped at gunpoint from her family's driveway was a hoax, authorities said Thursday. The girl, they said, spent most of the 15 hours she was missing Tuesday alone in an area southwest of Independence. Her disappearance prompted an Amber Alert, with the FBI bringing in 30 agents to join police and county officers in the search.

Man confesses to killings

LEOLA, Pa. — A young man was charged Thursday with bludgeoning or strangling six relatives whose bodies were found wrapped in sheets and blankets in the basement of his grandmother's home. Authorities said Jesse Dee Wise, 21, confessed to the crimes, but they would not comment on a motive. The victims spanned three generations of the same family; the youngest was just 5 years old.

Moussaoui unregretful

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Confessed al-Qaeda conspirator Zacarias Moussaoui said Thursday it made his day to hear accounts of Americans' suffering from the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks, and he would like to see similar attacks "every day." Taking the witness stand for the second time in his death-penalty trial Thursday, Moussaoui mocked a Navy sailor who wept on the stand as she described the death of two of her subordinates.

Yummy bunny

This Easter, the National Confectioners Association conducted a national survey to uncover kids' favorite Easter traditions. It found that more than half of kids polled grab for bunnies first in their basket and 75 percent are willing to do extra chores for extra Easter candy.

Seventy-six percent of people eat the ears on chocolate bunnies first.

UGB discusses Starbucks

By Hannah Crippen
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The Union Governing Board is wrapping up the semester.

The board met at 4 p.m. Thursday to discuss end-of-the-year issues. UPC's Springfest will be April 29. It will feature a local band and two comedians.

Jack Connaughton, associate director of the K-State Student Union, said they are still working with Starbucks to open stores in the Union and around campus.

Members discussed the idea of having food carts around the Union with treats, such as hot dogs and snowcones.

"I think it would really do well here, especially during this time of year," said Mary Fox, sophomore in political science.

The UGB decided against purchasing new artwork for the Union for the coming year.

"We look around the Union and evaluate the atmosphere and buy new art for the Union," said Anthony Carter, junior in secondary education and president of UGB.

The Union Program Council will have a joint retreat with the UGB.

The UPC also proposed the need for two new computers, a new laptop and printer.

Country singer nabs 1st at Greek Idol talent show

By Bhagavathy Umamaheswar
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The yodeling Erin Kemmerer, stole the hearts of the audience and judges alike, Thursday evening at City Park, and took home the title of Greek Idol.

"The competition was insane but I guess the yodeling was what helped me win," said Kemmerer, sophomore in pre-professional business administration who represented Chi Omega.

Kemmerer sang the solo number "I Want to Be a Cowboy's Sweetheart," which was originally performed by LeAnn Rimes.

The defending champions, Kristen Seiwert from Gamma Phi Beta, and Janie Anthony from Kappa Alpha Theta placed first and second runner's up, respectively.

"We were mainly looking at how the participants engaged the audience and how passionate they were about their performances," said Pat Bosco, dean of student life and one of the judges for the evening.

"We have some incredible talent here at K-State."

Jennifer Edwards, associate professor in music and another judge for the evening, said that there was an amazing variety in the type and quality of performances this year, which made judging the competition even harder.

The Greek Idol is a talent show and is in its fourth year as part of Greek Week. There were 13 performances comprising solos, bands and one dance group.

"There were about 23 tryouts and the Greek Week Steering Committee picked the top 13 performances for tonight," said Allison Crook, event organizer, and member of Alpha Chi Omega.

Such events give different chapters an opportunity to participate by performing and cheering, said Crook, sophomore in agricultural communications and journalism.

She said she was thankful for the beautiful weather and was happy with the evening's turnout.

One of the unique performances which kept the audience cheering was a Disney Medley by Mikey Needleman, Justin Briggs and Dick Akromis from Sigma Nu. Needleman and Briggs who have placed at the Idol on two previous occasions lived up to their reputation of being out-of-the-box performers.

"We don't try to outdo anybody," said Needleman, junior in psychology.

"The competition was insane, but I guess the yodeling was what helped me win."

Erin Kemmerer
SOPHOMORE

"Each of us has an exclusive stronghold, and it's great to fuse all our talent and entertain the audience," he said.

All the singers were amazing and sounded extremely professional, said Sarah Bever, a freshman in fashion design.

The participants were all competitive in a fun way, and we all supported each other, she added.

Indeed, the evening was not one of intense competition or rivalry but more in the spirit of bonhomie.

The winners received gift certificates from Pat's Blue Rib'N Barbeque, Chili's and Rock-A-Belly Deli.

The Greek Idol was a part of the Greek Week celebrations and was among other events like Greeks for Cans, the Greek Olympics and the Price is Right, which have been going on all week.

TO THE POINT

Students should utilize online evaluations

Online teacher evaluations are now available for K-State students.

Instructor/Course Evaluations were made available Monday at win.ksu.edu. The launch of ICE fulfilled the campaign promises of former student body president and vice president Michael Burns and Grant Groene, respectively.

Students should take advantage of this new resource that is available to them.

Unlike other online teacher evaluations, such as Pick-A-Prof and RateMyProfessors.com, ICE is available exclusively to K-State students, which means the analysis provided will hit home with more meaning.

Students can offer constructive advice to fellow students about what classes and instructors are the best for a particular subject area or department, which will help students find an instructor or professor that best fits his or her educational needs.

While this new resource is available, students should not forget about TEVALS, which are given to students toward the end of the semester. TEVALS still should be taken seriously by students and filled out with helpful comments, as this is the way many instructors and professors are evaluated regularly.

Sign on today and offer constructive feedback regarding teachers and courses.

To the point is an editorial selected and debated by the editorial board and written after a majority opinion is formed. This is the Collegian's official opinion.

Stop, look, listen

Crosswalk privileges should not be abused

MEGAN MOLITOR

I remember fondly the day of my first tour of K-State.

One of the first things my tour guide told our group was that our university was "a very pedestrian-friendly campus." I felt powerful as I stepped out onto a crosswalk for the first time, and traffic came to a halt.

Perhaps this is what Moses felt like when he parted the Red Sea.

I will admit, I still feel these crosswalks have many advantages when rushing to class. It's quite nice not to stand and wait for lines of traffic to pass while class proceeds without me.

However, I feel that many on our fine campus have taken the crosswalk ideal and mutated it into a wretched evil.

Therefore, I have ever so kindly created a few guidelines that I believe we should all follow in our crosswalk endeavors.

First of all, when we were all children, mommy and daddy taught us a very valuable lesson. Look both ways before crossing the street.

This rule does not go out of effect once you receive a high school diploma. No matter how "pedestrian friendly" our campus, it's still easy to miss a 5-foot woman with dark hair wearing black clothes at 11 p.m. I will do my best to see you and stop, but use that God-given talent of common sense, and don't take it for granted that the whole world knows when you cross the street and happily frolic across.

Next, one of the most irritating things a person can do when crossing the street is to slow down his or her pace when walking in front of a line of cars.

I guarantee you the people waiting are not there for a show of your fabulous self crossing the street. They probably have better things to be doing.

A slow motion of studly you and your backpack really isn't necessary, and I don't understand why certain individuals do it, especially when I saw the quick pace you were at before you reached the street.

My final piece of wisdom is one of what I consider to be an unforgivable annoyance.

Listen closely: Crosswalks are for crossing the street. The rest of the street isn't.

In case you weren't sure, the crosswalks on our campus are marked with big white lines.

You also can tell by the mobs of other students crossing the street in these areas.

Do not, I repeat, do not, make your own crosswalks in random places. You are not special, and you are not the crosswalk king. You are a blurry blob in my line of vision, and who knows how well my brakes are working.

I have faith in my fellow students. I choose to believe that these atrocities were not because of spite or a wish to annoy others.

On the contrary, I believe these acts were simply because of a lack of knowledge. So with this newfound wisdom, my peers, go forth into the world, and walk safely.

Megan Molitor is a sophomore in mass communications. Please send your comments to opinion@spub.ksu.edu.

End result of work should not be one's motive

CODY HOLUB

It's late at night, and I am at the library getting ready to write my column before its early deadline the next day. I have a topic in mind, but it really isn't satisfying me, as I think about how I want to organize and execute it.

Frankly, the fact that I might write a crappy article is daunting.

I think about skipping out on my responsibility and not submitting anything. I nearly come to terms with the fact that I would upset my editor for not completing my duty this week. But, right before I concede to failure, I think of an aphorism I have seen written on a whiteboard in my older brother's room.

The saying comes from the Bhagavad-Gita – a well-known and popular scripture from ancient India – and it goes, "On action alone be thy interest, never its fruits. Let not the fruits of action be thy motive, nor be thy attachment to inaction."

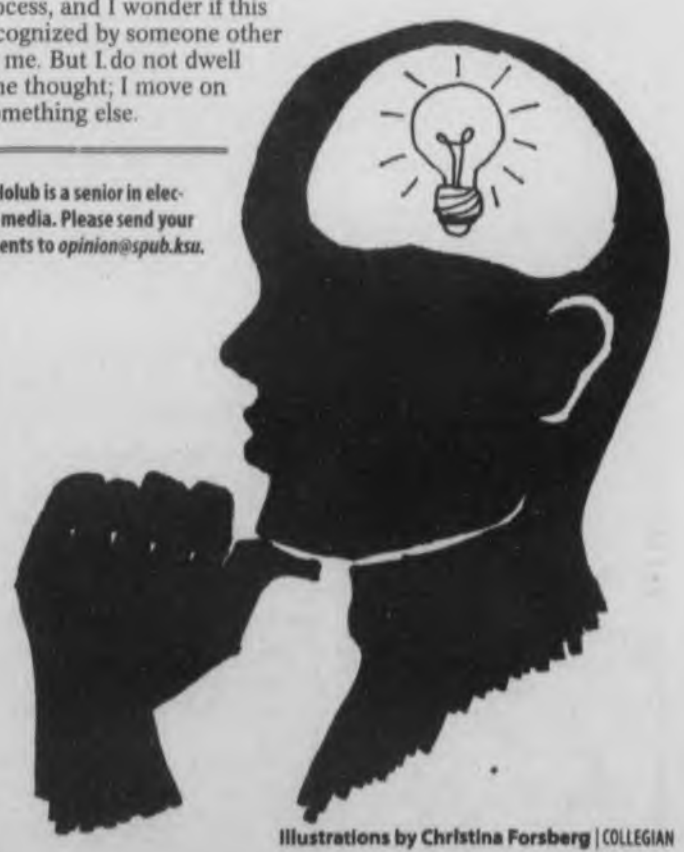
Based upon my contemplation of that message, I have decided to undergo a creative experiment. I will write my column without a specific goal in mind, focusing solely on the process, and not its product.

Here it goes: I've realized that I'm consistently in a state of waiting instead of doing. I heeded advice from an influence of mine, who said to be creative, not a passive observer. These moments only happen every so often, so one must take advantage of them.

Sometimes I wonder if in my passivity, I am not actually expressing my creativity without knowing it. If all observable things are really of the mind, then isn't what I am observing what I am creating?

So my creativity never ceases in that sense, but that would open the door to the lifestyle of being a slacker – a mindset that should be apparently of no benefactor.

I think I am afraid of writing because I feel like I will run out of things to say. Upon writing that, I realize it is a ridiculous notion. After I learned how to speak, there is not a day I can remember that I did not vocalize something, even if that something was to myself.



I don't know if I follow rules to writing; I do what I want, when I want.

For the sake of simplicity – or anything else for that matter – this seems to be the only reasonable approach. That goes for more than writing, by about a dollar and half, but that is beside the point (something of which I am currently trying to find). But what if I don't want one? Sometimes they hurt (depending on pressure, surface area, mass, velocity, etc.).

Now that I have come to terms with not having a point, it makes negotiation with present much easier. I don't have to worry about the future, or, that is, now, or, as it was, then. I am now allowed to focus on enjoyment of the process, and not the scrutiny that the resultant product endures.

Maybe this would be a good way to judge life (mine or others), but then again, how can I judge when a tangible product is not presented? It is seemingly an enigma at first – perhaps judgment should be excluded. As it were, I am not a product; I am thinking currently that I am a process, and I wonder if this is recognized by someone other than me. But I do not dwell on the thought; I move on to something else.

Live lessons in the history of jazz

By Adam Monroe
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State's "History of Jazz" course featured a personal live performance from renown Kansas City jazz artists.

"There is a lot you can get out of a live performance that you can't from a lecture or a CD," said Rebecca Spachek, senior in social work.

The performance was intended to give the students firsthand experience with the arts that they had been studying in their books.

Bram Wijnands, who played the piano during the performance, said some of the key differences between Kansas City jazz and other styles is found within the rhythm and bass.

"The rhythm section is essential in establishing the groove, and Kansas City jazz has a four-beat, or 'walking' baseline," Wijnands said.

The jazz trio featured a drummer, a stand-up bassist and a piano player.

Wijnands said he was originally born in Holland.

"I was born in Eindhoven, Holland, and started playing the piano when I was 3 years old. I was meant to play K.C. jazz; I just love that stuff. It puts me into a trance," Wijnands said.

Wijnands said he has played in various places all over the world.

"I have played shows in many places, including Russia. Those shows were a lot of fun because jazz was mostly considered underground music at the time," Wijnands said.

At the performance, Wijnands discussed and compared various types of jazz artists and eras, played recorded examples, performed, and then heard questions from the audience.

"I had a great experience here. The students are really into it. I love it when students ask intelligent questions, and pick your brain," Wijnands said.

The bassist, Lucky Wesley, said he is also involved with a Kansas City group known as Scamps, which holds the Guinness Book record for the longest continually performing jazz group.

"The group originally started in 1932, but I have been playing with them for the last 35 years," Wesley said.

Wesley said he enjoyed his opportunity to perform for the K-State students.

"Anytime people enjoy what you do, you enjoy it too," Wesley said.

Wayne Goins, associate professor of music and History of Jazz instructor, said the performance was a great chance to experience Kansas City jazz they way it was meant to be played.

"If you wanted a more authentic sound you would have to bring those artists back from the dead," Goins said. "(Wijnands) has mastered the masters. It was like the clock turned back 70 years."

Campus groups plan Easter, spring themed activities

By Kaley Lyon
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Many campus organizations, both religious and non-religious, have planned activities in honor of the Easter season.

St. Isidore Catholic Student Center, 711 Denison St., will have the masses traditionally held during this time of year, including services on Holy Thursday and Good Friday.

An Easter vigil mass will be held at 8 p.m. on Holy Saturday, and there will be services at 9:30 and 11 a.m. on Easter Sunday.

Holy Saturday marks the high point of the church year, Fr. Keith Weber said. During this mass, new members join the church, and infants are baptized on Easter Sunday, Weber said.

Protestant churches also will celebrate the Easter holiday. The United Methodist Campus Ministry, 1021 Denison St., also will have special church services, including a service on Good Friday.

Manhattan has three United Methodist churches, and students attend those for different holy week activities, the Rev. Mitch Todd, campus minister, said.

However, campus ministries are not the only organizations celebrating the season. Many residence halls are planning special events, such as Easter egg hunts.

"I just think everyone thought it would be a good idea and fun," said Leslie Williams, Haymaker resident assistant and sophomore in secondary education.

Haymaker Hall will have an all-hall Easter egg hunt today. Three Resident Assistants will hide the eggs, and students will have all day to search for them, Williams said.

Students will turn in their eggs between 4:30 and 5 p.m. in the Haymaker basement, and the student who finds the most eggs will win an Easter basket prize, Williams said.

"This is the first year we're doing this, but depending on how well it goes, it may become an annual thing," she said.

Putnam Hall also had an egg hunt, which was on Wednesday. Residents put on the event themselves, and the winners received prizes, said Ryan Spencer, president of Putnam and senior in hotel and restaurant management.

The Association of Residence Halls is planning a bigger event, the annual Spring Fling celebration, said Spencer, who also is president of the ARH.

This event will be for students in all of the residence halls and will take place on Saturday, April 29.

While this celebration was formerly a week-long event, it will last for only one day this year, Spencer said.

The events will begin with a barbeque at 11 a.m., followed by a 3 p.m. egg hunt. Students will compete in activities, such as relay races, throughout the day, Spencer said.

"It's kind of a wacky olympics kind of thing," he said.

The student who tallies up the most points at the end of the days will receive an iPod Nano, Spencer said.

"The Chronicles of Narnia: The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe" will be played on an outside big screen system at 8:30 p.m. to conclude the day's activities, Spencer said.

Sunset Zoo's holiday Eggstravaganza features learning stations for children

By Kristin Hodges
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Sunset Zoological Park will have an Eggstravaganza Saturday to celebrate egg-laying animals.

Rachel Soash, Sunset Zoo curator of education, said the event will have multiple activities throughout the zoo.

"There will be stations where kids can play educational games, and kids can earn eggs full of a surprise at each station," Soash said.

Soash said face painting also will be available.

Tammie Jones, Sunset Zoo office administrator, said Flopsy the Bunny will be available for children to take pictures with for $2.

Jones said a live animal program will run at 1:30 and 3:30 p.m.

David Carter, vice president for Friends of the Sunset Zoo, said the organization will have a table of animal artifacts set up for the event.

"It's a fun way for children to have a hands-on experience when learning about animals," Carter said.

The Friends of the Zoo will also have a table set up for anyone wanting to purchase a membership for the group.

The group is a non-profit organization that helps raise funds for zoo projects, Carter said.

Carter said members of Friends of the Sunset Zoo get in free for the Eggstravaganza, as well as other perks.

Eggstravaganza
When: 1 to 4 p.m. Saturday
Where: Sunset Zoological Park, 2333 Oak St.
How much: $4 adult, $2 ages 3-12, free for ages 2 and under

"A year after the purchase of the membership, members have free admission into the zoo," Carter said. "This allows families with small children to see all of the zoo if they are not able to see it at one time."

DISTRIBUTION OF NEW K-STATE STUDENT ID CARDS
Distribution of new Kansas State University student wildcat identification cards will begin April 17, 2006 in the Staterooms, located on the first floor of the K-State Student Union. The distribution will be done alphabetically by last name.
Beginning Monday, April 17, students may pick up their cards from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m.
last names A - D: Monday, April 17
last names E - J: Tuesday, April 18
last names K - N: Wednesday, April 19
last names O - S: Thursday, April 20
last names T - Z: Friday, April 21
You will only be able to receive your new ID card on the day you are assigned. If you are not able to pick up your new ID card on that day, you will need to wait until after April 24, when you may pick up your new card at the ID Center on the first floor of the K-State Student Union.
There will be no charge, but you must have previously purchased a K-State Wildcat ID card. You will be required to show a photo ID in order to receive your new card. Your old K-State Wildcat ID card, a driver's license, or other photo ID will be accepted.
If you have applied for May graduation, a new card will not be produced for you. If you will be entering graduate school next fall, please contact the ID Center.
The effective date for use of new ID cards for students will be May 22. Until that date, please continue to use your current K-State ID card.
For any questions, please contact the K-State ID Center at (785) 532-6399.

Tennis team prepares for Big 12's best in Horns, Aggies

By Jonathan Garten
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State women's tennis team travels to the Lone Star State this weekend, to challenge two of the Big 12 Conference's traditional powers.

The Wildcats head to College Station, Texas, on Saturday to take on No. 38 Texas A&M (10-9, 6-1 Big 12) before going to Austin Sunday to play No. 17 Texas (12-9, 6-1).

Despite a record just above .500, Texas A&M is a very good team, coach Steve Bietau said.

"Their record wasn't great early, but their schedule was just brutal," Bietau said. "They had a big win over Texas last week – that might show just how strong they really are."

The Aggies play host to matches at the George P. Mitchell Outdoor Tennis Center. The venue holds a capacity of 3,000 fans and has 12 lighted courts.

Playing at Texas A&M is enough to get anyone excited, Bietau said.

"It's a good thing for college tennis," Bietau said. "It's a fun place to play, but it's not easy to be in the fire there against them."

The atmosphere can be intimidating to play in, senior Jessica Simosa said.

"We're going to have a lot of people cheering against us," Simosa said. "It's hot out there, and it's really tough."

Keeping a cool head will be important, Simosa said.

"I know if I get mad that the fans will use that against me," Simosa said. "So maybe I'll try to not show when I'm mad."

Things will not get any easier on Sunday, when K-State plays the Longhorns.

Despite a few bumps in the road, Texas has maintained its status as one of the best teams in the Big 12.

"They were thought of as an elite team all year long," Bietau said. "At times they have struggled to keep that elite status, but they've been very good all the way through."

A win against the Aggies or Longhorns would give the Wildcats a boost, Bietau said.

"These are the type of teams that we really look forward to playing because we have the opportunity to make a big mark," Bietau said.

Texas A&M and Texas are both teams with winning traditions in the Big 12, Bietau said.

"Texas and Texas A&M, for a longer period of time, have been elite teams in the conference, and that's not to take anything away from Baylor right now, but they've been playing at that level longer," Bietau said.

K-State will need to be sharp – both mentally and physically – to pull off an upset, sophomore Olga Klimova said.

"We kind of know what we can expect, and we have worked on our mental preparation in practice because that will be important for a victory," Klimova said.

Wildcats hitting their stride as golf team heads to Texas for regular season finale

By Cedrique Flemming
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

The K-State men's golf team seems to be peaking at the right time.

In the last two tournaments, the Wildcats have placed in the top three, and the last time out in the ASU Thunderbird Invitational April 8-9, the field included four teams in the Golfweek/Sagarin top 25.

The Wildcats will be in for more of the same when they travel Saturday and Sunday to Bryan, Texas, to compete in the Aggie Invitational.

The tournament will be played at the par 72, 7,235-yard Traditions Club golf course, designed by Jack Nicklaus and will boast some of the highest-ranked competition for K-State this season.

No. 2 Oklahoma State, No. 9 Baylor, No. 10 (and host school) Texas A&M, and No. 23 Texas Tech are a few of the 12 teams competing in the Invitational, as K-State plays in their final tune-up before the Big 12 Conference Championships next week.

The other teams representing the Big 12 in the tournament are Colorado and Oklahoma.

Coach Tim Norris' team sits at 69th in the country, and they are more confident now than they have been all season. Taking third against a tough field like the one at the Thunderbird the players' confidence going into the latter stages of the spring, he said.

"Obviously, to do it that first time is the toughest, and hopefully this time it will be a little bit easier," Norris said. "The guys still have to play well and hit the shots and make the putts, but I think they have the feeling now that we can hang with a lot of these teams, if we just play up to our potential."

Senior Ben Kern has been playing well as of late, winning the Thunderbird and taking third in the rain-shortened Stevinson Ranch Invitational March 27-28.

In the Thunderbird, Kern set a school and tournament record with his 14-under-par 199, and, for his efforts, he earned Men's Collegiate Player of the Week honors by both Golfweek and Golfworld.

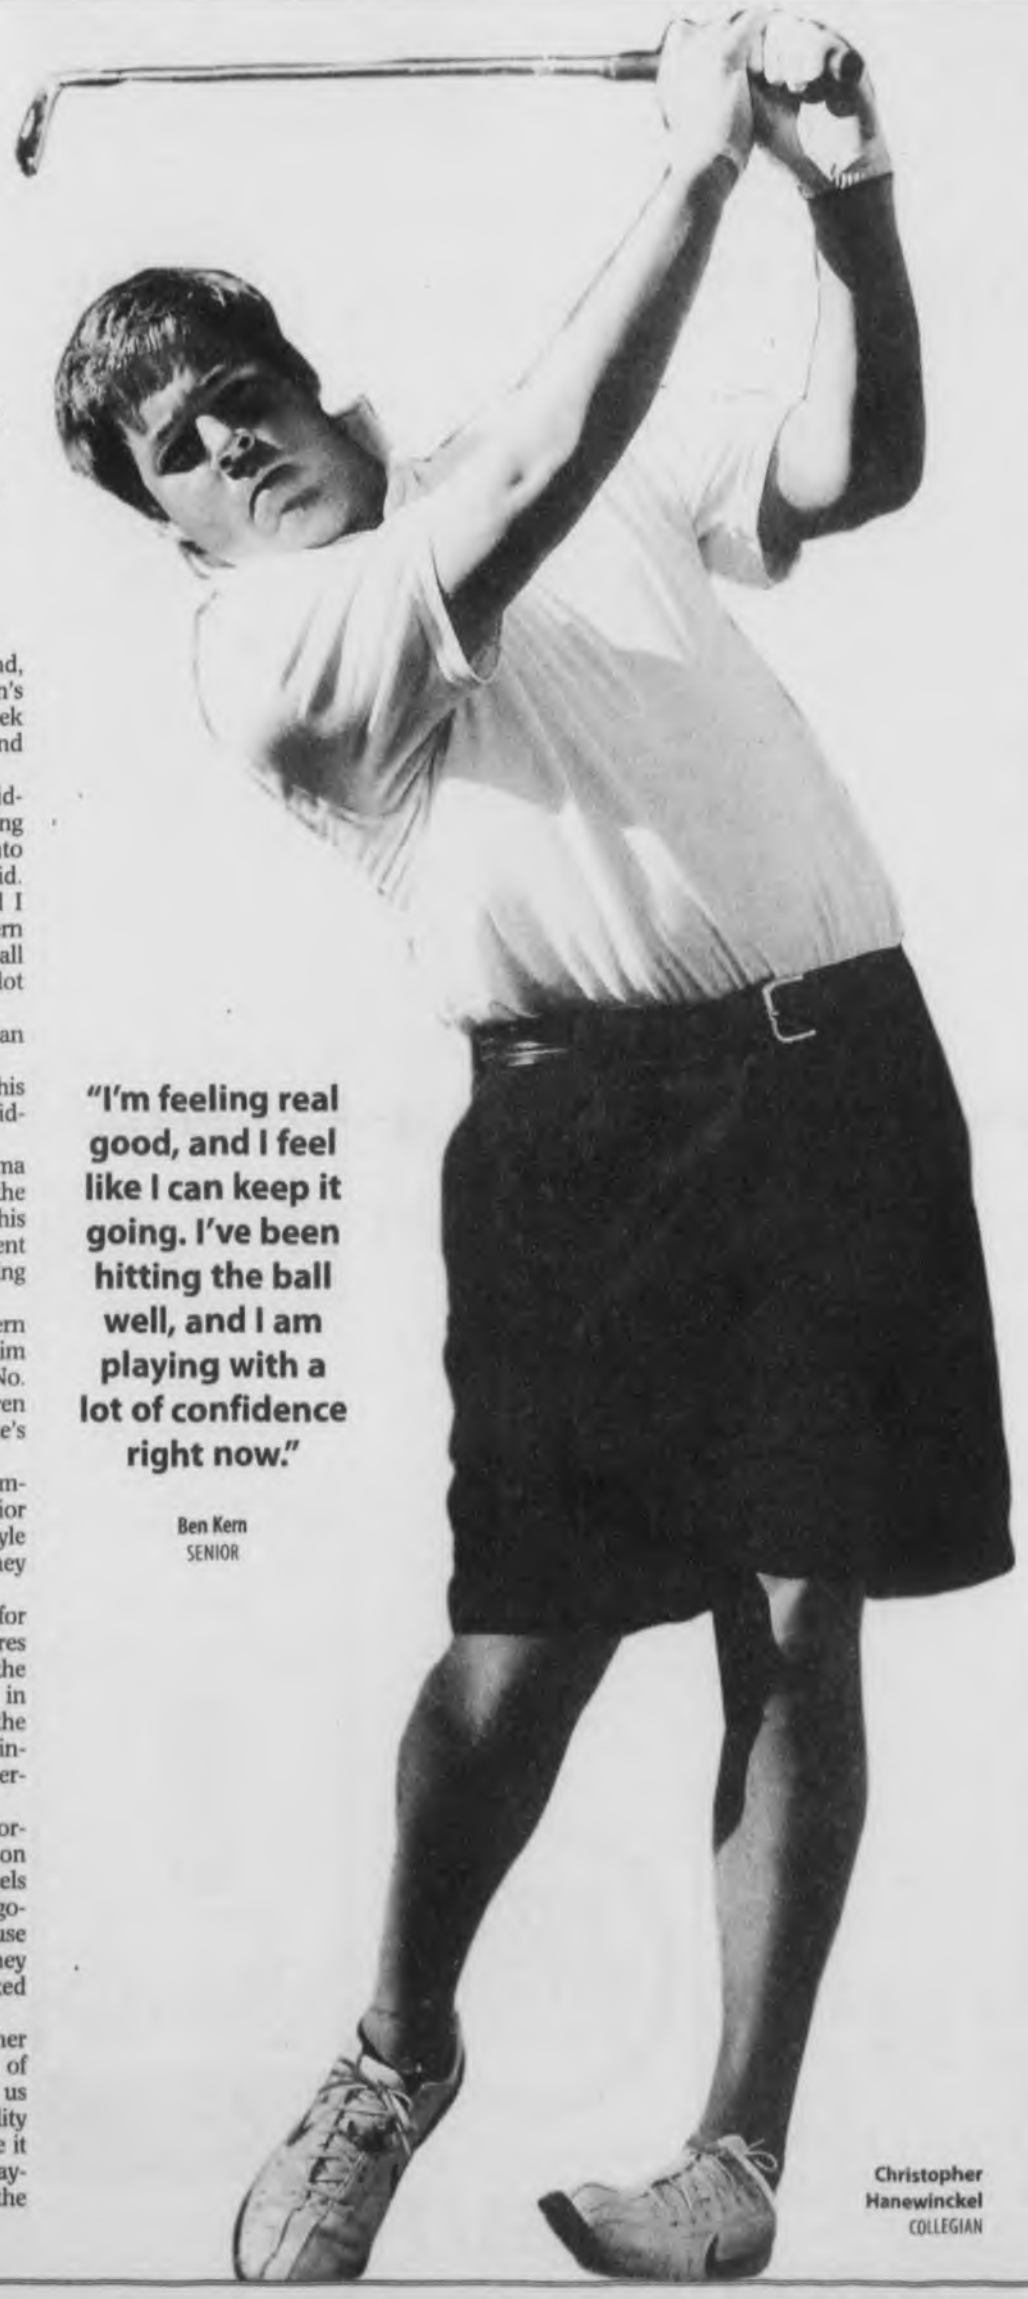
He now sits at No. 78 individually in the country and is feeling extremely confident going into the regular season finale, he said.

"I'm feeling real good, and I feel like I can keep it going," Kern said. "I've been hitting the ball well, and I am playing with a lot of confidence right now.

"I have no doubt that I can win again."

Kern will be challenged this week by some of the top individual golfers in the country.

Pablo Martin of Oklahoma State is the No. 1 golfer in the country, and he will lead his Cowboys into the tournament this weekend as the defending champions.



Challenging him and Kern will be Oklahoma's Anthony Kim (No. 3), Baylor's Ryan Baca (No. 5), Texas Tech's Oscar Floren (No. 13) and Oklahoma State's Tyler Leon (No. 19).

The rest of the Wildcats competing this weekend are senior Tyler Cummins, sophomore Kyle Yonke and freshmen Joe Kinney and Robert Streb.

This lineup has accounted for the top three 54-hole team scores vs. par for K-State, including the second-lowest 54-hole score in school history last week at the Thunderbird when the team finished with a combined 17-under-par 835.

Kinney said he is looking forward to the challenge of taking on another tough field, and he feels the team is more confident going into this tournament because they have already proven they can compete with top-ranked teams.

"We are putting it all together at the most important time of the year," Kinney said. "All of us knew we could hang with quality teams, and now we have done it once. We just have to keep playing to our potential down the stretch."

"I'm feeling real good, and I feel like I can keep it going. I've been hitting the ball well, and I am playing with a lot of confidence right now."

Split track squad travels to Arizona, Nebraska

By Wendy Haun
KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

A portion of the K-State track team will compete on Saturday at the Sun Angel Classic in Tempe, Ariz., while another group will head to the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Neb.

Junior Lisi Maurer will compete at the Sun Angel in the 4x400-meter relay with fellow teammates junior Shunte Thomas, sophomore Donniece Parrish and sophomore Morgan Bonds. The foursome broke K-State's previous record on April 7 at the Texas Relays by clocking a time of 3:33.45.

"There's going to be a lot of fast people there," Maurer said. "It's a very good meet, so that's exciting."

Freshman Scott Sellers, who also is competing at the Sun Angel, is trying to take it week-by-week, he said.

Sellers qualified for NCAA Midwest Regionals in both the high and triple jump on March 23-24 at the Wildcat Combined Events in Tucson, Ariz.

"Participating in regionals is one of the first steps of getting to nationals, but I still have to stay focused on each meet," he said.

Despite qualifying, he's still focused on improving, he said.

"It's my second time in triple jump, so I'm looking forward to seeing if I have made any progress in my training," he said.

With regionals right around the corner, Sellers said he is not letting himself get distracted.

Predictions for MLB season: 2006-style

MARK POTTER

The 2006 Major League Baseball season is nearly two weeks old, and some trends have started to emerge.

I'm sure there will be plenty of changes between now and the end of the 162-game season, but it's never too early to make predictions.

Here are some predictions for the season:

■ San Francisco slugger Barry Bonds won't break Hank Aaron's all-time home-run record this season.

Entering Thursday's double-header, Bonds had a grand total of zero home runs this season. Bonds sits at 708 career home runs, which is 47 shy of Hammerin' Hank's 755.

In a normal season, Bonds would have a good chance to hit 47 homers, but not this season. There are just too many concerns surrounding Bonds' health, age and the whole steroid investigation.

Even if Bonds plays a full season, he probably won't see enough good pitches to hit 47 homers. He already has walked seven times in six games.

■ If their starting pitchers can stay healthy, the Boston Red Sox, not the New York Yankees, will win the American League East.

Once again, the AL East is Major League Baseball's strongest division. The Toronto Blue Jays have closed the gap by adding starting pitcher A.J. Burnett, closer B.J. Ryan and third baseman Troy Glaus, but the division will once again come down to two teams – the Yankees and the Red Sox.

The Red Sox will win the AL East for one main reason: starting pitching.

Entering Thursday, Boston's trio of Curt Schilling, Josh Beckett and Matt Clement combined for five of the team's six wins. Schilling and Beckett each rank in the top five in American League earned run average. If these three pitchers can stay healthy – a big "if" – the Red Sox own a slight edge against the Yankees.

■ The Kansas City Royals will lose 100 games for a third-straight year and the fourth time in five seasons.
